INTRODUCTION.

P. VERGILIUS¹ MARO was born Oct. 15, B.C. 70, at Andes, a small village near Mantua in Cisalpine Gaul, five years before Horace and seven before C. Octavius, who later, under the names of Octavian and Augustus, was destined to become his great patron. His father was a yeoman, and cultivated a small farm of his own. The boy was educated at Cremona and Mediolanum (Milan), and is said to have subsequently studied at Neapolis (Naples) under Parthenius of Bithynia, from whom he learnt Greek, and at Rome under Siron, an Epicurean philosopher, and Epidius, a rhetorician. His works afford ample evidence of his wide reading, and he certainly merits the epithet of doctus to which all the poets of his age aspired;² a noble passage in the Georgics (2. 475-492) expresses his deep admiration for scientific and philosophic study, while throughout the Aeneid, and especially in the speeches of the fourth Book, there are marked traces of that rhetorical training which has left such a profound impress on the literature of the succeeding century.

On completing his education he seems to have returned home, and some of the minor poems ascribed to him—Ciris, Copa, Culex, Dirae, Moretum—may be in reality youthful attempts of his composed during this period. Our first certain knowledge, however, of his poetic career begins in B.C. 42, when, after the defeat of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi, the Roman world passed into the hands of the triumvirs Octavian, Antony, and Lepidus. They had promised their victorious veterans the lands of eighteen cities in Italy, among which was Cremona, and subsequently it became necessary to include the neighbouring district of Mantua.¹ Virgil's father was threatened with the loss of his farm,² but the youthful poet had secured the favour of C. Asinius Pollio, governor of Cisalpine Gaul, and of L. Alfenus Varus, his successor (B.C. 41), whose assistance he invokes in the sixth Eclogue. Pollio, himself a scholar and poet,³ accepted the dedication of his earliest Eclogues,⁴ and secured for him an introduction to Octavian at Rome,¹ as a result of which he obtained the restoration of the farm. His gratitude to the youthful triumvir finds expression in the Eclogue which he prefixed to the others, and which now stands at their head.

From this time Virgil lived at Rome or Naples enjoying the bounty and friendship of the Emperor and forming part of the select circle of distinguished men, which his minister Maecenas—the great literary patron of the day—gathered round him in his mansion on the Esquiline. It was at the request of Maecenas² that he composed the four Books of the Georgics, written between 37 B.C. and 30 B.C., and dedicated to him.³ We know little of his life, but it was he who introduced Horace to Maecenas,⁴ and in Horace's writings we catch an occasional glimpse of him, notably in the description of the famous 'journey to Brundisium', when he joined the party of Maecenas at Sinuessa, and, along with Plotius and Varius, is classed by his brother-poet in a memorable phrase among 'the fairest souls and dearest friends on earth',⁵ while on another occasion Horace makes his starting for a tour in Greece the occasion for an Ode, in which he prays that the ship which bears so dear a trust may restore it safe to the shores of Italy, 'and preserve the half of my life'.¹

In the opening lines of the third Georgic Virgil had already announced his intention of attempting a loftier theme and producing a great national epic, of which Augustus should be the central figure, and the emperor himself is said to have written to him from Spain (B.C. 27) encouraging him to publish the poem, which he was known to have in hand, and which Propertius a year or two later heralds as 'something greater than the Iliad'.² While he was engaged on its composition in B.C. 23, Marcellus, the nephew and destined heir of Augustus, died, and Virgil introduced into the sixth Book the famous passage (861-888) in which he is described, and of which the story is told that when the poet recited it in the presence of Octavia, the bereaved mother fainted away.³ In B.C. 20 he visited Greece and met Augustus, who was returning from Samos, at Athens, whence he accompanied him homewards, but his health, which had been long weak, broke down, and he died at Brundisium Sept. 22, B.C. 19.

He was buried at Naples on the road which leads to Puteoli. The inscription said to have been inscribed on his tomb refers to the places of his birth, death, and burial, and to the subjects of his three great works:

Parthenope: cecini pascua, rura, duces.*

Virgil was largely read in his own day, and his works, like those of Horace, at once became a standard text-book in schools,¹ and were commented on by numerous critics and grammarians, of whom Aulus Gellius in the second century and Macrobius and Servius in the fourth are the most important. The early Christians in the belief, still unquestioned in the days of Pope,² that the fourth Eclogue contained a prophecy of Christ, looked upon him almost with reverence, and it is not merely as the greatest of Italian singers, but also as something of a saint, that Dante claims him as his master and guide in the Inferno. In popular esteem he was long regarded as a wizard (possibly owing to his description of the Sibyl and the under world in the sixth Aeneid), and it was customary to consult his works as oracles by opening them at random and accepting the first lines which were chanced upon as prophetic. The emperor Alexander Severus thus consulted the Sortes Vergilianae, and opened at the words Aen. 6. 852 tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento, while Charles I. in the Bodleian Library at Oxford came upon the famous lines Aen. 4. 615-620 :

finibus extorris, complexu avulsus Iuli, auxilium imploret, videatque indigna suorum funera ; nec, quum se sub leges pacis iniquae tradiderit, regno aut optata luce fruatur, sed cadat ante diem mediisque inhumatus arena.*

In considering Virgil's writings, it must be borne in mind that, with the exception of satire, Roman poetry is entirely modelled on Greek. Terence copies Menander, Lucretius Empedocles, Horace Alcaeus and Sappho, Propertius Callimachus, and so on. Virgil in his Eclogues professedly imitates Theocritus, in his Georgics Hesiod, and in the Aeneid Homer. The cultured circle of readers for whom he wrote would probably have turned aside with contempt from a poem which relied wholly on native vigour, and did not conform, at any rate outwardly, to one of the accepted standards of literary excellence. They relished some happy reproduction of a Greek phrase, which was 'caviare to the general', much in the same way that English scholars sometimes dwell with peculiar satisfaction on passages of Milton which it needs a knowledge of Latin to appreciate. Horace in his treatise on Poetry (l. 268) lays down the law which was considered universally binding on all poets :

and Seneca (Suas. 3) tells us that Virgil borrowed from the Greeks non surripiendi causa, sed palam imitandi, hoc animo ut vellet adgnosci.

The Bucolics (Βουκολικά ‘songs about herdsmen’) consist of ten short poems commonly called Eclogues (i.e. ‘Selections’) and belong to the class of poetry called ‘pastoral’. They are largely copied from Theocritus, a Greek poet who flourished during the first half of the third century B.C., and who, though born at Cos and for some time resident in Alexandria, spent the chief portion of his life in Sicily. His poems, called ‘Idylls’ (Εἰδύλλια) or ‘small sketches’, are descriptive for the most part of country life and often take the form of dialogue. Their origin is to be traced to that love of music and song which is developed by the ease and happiness of pastoral life in a southern clime (Lucr. 5. 1379 seq.), and to the singing-matches and improvisations common at village feasts, especially among the Dorians who formed so large a proportion of the colonists of Sicily. The Idylls however differ from the Eclogues in a marked manner. They are true to nature; the scenery is real; the shepherds are 'beings of flesh and blood';¹ their broad Doric has the native vigour of the Scotch of Burns. The Eclogues, on the other hand, are highly artificial. They are idealized sketches of rustic life written to suit the taste of polished readers in the metropolis of the world. 'Grace and tenderness' are, as Horace notes,² their chief characteristics, and the 'Lycidas' of Milton is an enduring monument of his admiration for them, but true pastoral poetry can scarcely be written under such conditions. The shepherds and shepherdesses of the Eclogues, like those depicted on Sèvres porcelain or the canvases of Watteau, are 'graceful and tender,' but they are imaginary and unreal.

The Georgics (Γεωργικά) are, as their name implies, a 'Treatise on Husbandry' consisting of four Books (containing in all 2,184 lines), of which the First deals with husbandry proper, the Second with the rearing of stock, the Third with the cultivation of trees, and the Fourth with bee-keeping. They profess to be an imitation³ of Hesiod, a very ancient poet of Ascrea in Boeotia, whose poem entitled 'Works and Days',¹ consists of a quantity of short sententious precepts thrown into a poetic form. Such poetry is called 'didactic' because its aim is to convey instruction. In early ages, when writing is unknown or little used, proverbs and precepts are naturally cast into a poetic mould for the simple reason that they are thus rendered less liable to alteration and more easy of recollection.² Even when prose writing has become common a philosopher or a preacher may endeavour to render his subject more attractive by clothing it in poetic dress,³ and shortly before Virgil began to write Lucretius had so embodied the philosophic system of Epicurus in his De Rerum Natura. That splendid poem was constantly in Virgil's mind when he wrote the Georgics, but, though he found in Lucretius a source of inspiration and in Hesiod a model, he differs widely from them both. Hesiod wrote didactic poetry because in his day it was practically useful, Lucretius wrote it in the interests of what he believed to be philosophical truth; Virgil's object is on the other hand not primarily to instruct but to please. What he writes is excellent sense, for he thoroughly understood his subject, and his love for agriculture and the 'divine country' is undoubtedly genuine, but he writes to gratify the artistic and literary tastes of his readers and not with any practical aim. The characteristic indeed of the Georgics is their consummate art. They are written with slow¹ and elaborate care. Each line has been polished to the utmost perfection, or, to use a phrase attributed to Virgil,² 'licked into shape like a bear's cub.' The Aeneid is conventionally spoken of as Virgil's greatest work, and, possibly, the dramatic power of the fourth Book and the imaginative grandeur of the sixth surpass anything in the Georgics, but as a monument of his literary skill they stand unequalled.³

The Aeneid consists of twelve books, and is an epic poem professedly modelled on Homer.⁴ The first six books describe the wanderings and the second six the wars of Aeneas, so that the whole work constitutes a Roman Odyssey and Iliad in one.

Book I. relates how Aeneas, a Trojan prince, son of Venus and Anchises, while sailing with his fleet from Sicily, encounter a storm stirred up by Neptune at the request of Juno, who, still cherishing the wrath first aroused in her by the fatal judgment of Paris, desires to destroy the last remnant of the Trojan race, and so prevent their founding in Italy a second and mightier empire. Cast ashore on the African coast Aeneas and his followers are hospitably welcomed by Dido, the Phoenician queen, who is just completing the building of Carthage. At a banquet given in their honour Dido, who through the schemes of Venus has become enamoured of Aeneas, invites him to tell her his history.

³ This statement may be definitely tested in one point. Let any one take the first Georgic and examine the exquisite finish of rhythm exhibited in lines 27, 65, 80, 85, 108, 181, 199, 281-3, 293, 295, 320, 328-334, 341, 356, 378, 388, 389, 406-9, 449, 468, 482. There is nothing like it in the Aeneid.

In Book II. Aeneas relates¹ the storm and sack of Troy and his own escape, along with his father Anchises and his son Ascanius.²

In Book III. the narrative is continued, and Aeneas describes how, in pursuit of that 'Western Land' (Hesperia) which had been promised him by an oracle, he had wandered to Thrace, Crete, Epirus, and Sicily, where his father had died.

Book IV. resumes the main narrative from the end of Book I. Dido's passion for Aeneas becomes overmastering, and he accepts her love, lingering in Carthage unmindful of his quest, until Jupiter sends Mercury to bid him depart at once. In spite of Dido's pleading he sets sail, and she stabs herself.

In Book V. Aeneas reaches Italy on the anniversary of his father's death, and celebrates elaborate funeral games in his honour. Juno persuades the matrons to set fire to the ships, but Aeneas prays for rain, which stays the flames, and then, leaving the less adventurous among his followers behind, he sets sail for Italy.

In Book VI. Aeneas lands at Cumae, and with the help of the Sibyl discovers the 'golden bough,' which is a passport through the under world. Through it he passes, guided by the Sibyl, and finally finds Anchises, who points out to him the souls of those who are destined to become great Romans and describes their future fortunes, after which Aeneas returns safely to the upper air.

Books VI.-XII. describe how Aeneas allied himself with Latinus, king of the Latins, and received the promise of the hand of his daughter Lavinia, and how Turnus, king of the Rutuli, a former suitor for Lavinia's hand, opposed him, but was at last defeated and slain.

The Aeneid, it will thus be seen, is a sort of national epic intended to connect the origin of the Romans (and especially of the Julian family) with the gods and heroes of Homeric song, and incidentally serving to dignify many Roman customs and ceremonies by identifying them with the customs and ceremonies of the heroic age. At the same time Aeneas and his followers, as through difficulties and dangers, putting their trust in heaven, they steadily press forward to success, afford a visible personification of those virtues which had slowly and surely secured for Rome the empire of the world, while Aeneas himself 'as a fatherly ruler over his people, their chief in battle, their law-giver in peace, and their high-priest in all spiritual relations,'¹ is clearly a type of Augustus, the founder of the new monarchy.²

As a story of war and adventure the Aeneid cannot compete in freshness and life with the Iliad and the Odyssey. It could hardly do so. Between the bard who chants the 'glory of heroes' at the feasts of warrior chiefs in a primitive age and the studious poet who expects the patronage of Augustus and the criticism of Maecenas there is a gulf which nothing can bridge. Indeed the Aeneid and the Homeric poems, though they challenge comparison by their similarity of form, are really so profoundly different in spirit and character that they ought never to be compared. It would be as easy to compare 'Chevy Chase' with the 'Idylls of the King.' The one is a natural growth, the other an artistic creation. The one describes men who live and breathe as they appeared to men of like passions in their own day; the other attempts to give animation to the ghosts of the past, and make them interesting to men whose thoughts, tastes, and tempers are wholly different. To the Homeric story-teller and his hearers the story is the chief thing and its literary form the second; to Virgil and his readers literary art is the first thing, and the actual facts of the story are comparatively unimportant.

Moreover, Virgil is unhappy in his hero. Compared with Achilles his Aeneas is but the shadow of a man.¹ He is an abstraction typifying the ideal Roman, in whom reverence for the gods (pietas) and manly courage (virtus) combine, and who therefore ultimately achieves what he aims at in spite of 'manifold mischances and all the risks of fortune'.² Indeed throughout the Aeneid he is so regulated by 'fate', visions, and superintending deities that it is hard to take any real interest in his acts and doings. But he is not only unreal and uninteresting; he is displeasing. Sum pius Aeneas is how he introduces himself,¹ and all through he goes about with that painful adjective ostentatiously tied round his neck, doing what he ought to do and saying what he ought to say from first to last. Once only he exhibits human frailty, and then it is to show that as a human being he is contemptible. He accepts the love of Dido and then abandons her to despair and death. There is no need to emphasize his crime; Virgil himself has done that sufficiently. The splendid passage (4. 305-392) which describes the final interview between Aeneas and the queen is a masterpiece. To an appeal which would move a stone Aeneas replies with the cold and formal rhetoric of an attorney. Then Dido bursts into an invective which, for concentrated scorn, nervous force, and tragic grandeur, is almost unequalled. Finally, sweeping from the room, she sinks swooning into the arms of her attendants, while Aeneas is left stammering and 'preparing to say many things'—a hero who had, one would think, lost his character for ever. But Virgil seems unmoved by his own genius, and begins the next paragraph quite placidly at pius Aeneas . . . ! How the man who wrote the lines placed in Dido's mouth could immediately afterwards speak of 'the good Aeneas etc.' is one of the puzzles of literature, and even the fact that the Aeneid was never finished does not explain so glaring an inconsistency. The point is inexplicable, but we ought in fairness to remember that the chilling shadow of imperial patronage rested upon Virgil. He was not only a poet but a poet-laureate. It is the poet who pens the speeches of Dido, while the poet-laureate describes the 'good Aeneas' to gratify a prince who in order to found an empire—dum conderet urbem—would certainly not have let a woman's ruin stand in the way of state policy or his own ambition.

Although however as an epic poem the Aeneid is wanting in vitality and human interest, the praise of eighteen centuries is sufficient evidence of its striking merits. What those merits are has been already partly indicated in referring to the Georgics. Virgil is a master of melodious rhythm, and he is a master of literary expression. The Latin hexameter, which in Ennius, the father of Latin poetry, is cumbrous and uncouth, and in Lucretius, though powerful and imposing, still lacks grace and versatility, has been moulded by Virgil into a perfect instrument capable of infinite varieties and responsive to every phase of emotion; while, as regards his literary power it is impossible to read ten lines anywhere without coming across one of those felicitous phrases the charm of which is beyond question as it is beyond analysis. But these external graces are not all. Virgil is a man of deep though controlled feeling. He is a patriot who loves his country with a love 'far brought from out the storied past', and his pride in her imperial greatness animates the whole poem and lives in many a majestic line.¹ He has pondered long and painfully on the vicissitudes and shortness of human life, but his sadness (which some have censured as 'pessimism'), while it lends pathos to his style, never degenerates into despair, and the lesson which he draws from the certainty of death is the necessity of action.² He is deeply religious and a firm believer in an overruling Power who rewards the good³ and requites the evil,⁴ but the riddle of 'all-powerful Chance and inevitable Doom'⁵ is ever before his mind, and this blending of belief and doubt, of faith and perplexity, congenial as it is to human nature, has a singular attractiveness.

It is unnecessary, after what has been already said about the fourth Book, to point out what a strength of rhetorical force, what a reserve of passionate emotion underlies the habitual quiet and reflectiveness of Virgil's temper. That book indeed reveals an intensity of feeling and a dramatic power, of which the rest of his writings afford little sign; but there is another book of the Aeneid which rises to a still higher level and places Virgil in the foremost ranks of poetry. The sixth Book is beyond praise: to it Virgil chiefly owes his fame; it is here that he exhibits, in fullest measure, the highest poetic powers of imagination and invention; it is here that we find the Virgil who is worthy to walk side by side with Dante, and with whom John Bunyan and John Milton are to be compared. As we pass with him into the under world, by the sole force of genius he makes a dream seem to us a living fact; he commands our thoughts to follow whithersoever he leads them, and they obey; under his guidance we tread with ghostly but unhesitating footsteps that dim and unknown highway which extends beyond the grave.

For an ordinary man, however, to criticize Virgil is almost an impertinence. It needs a poet to appreciate a poet, and the judgment of Alfred Tennyson outweighs that of a host of critics and commentators. There could be no more just and happy tribute from one master to another than the following Ode addressed by the English to the Roman Virgil.*

TO VIRGIL.

WRITTEN AT THE REQUEST OF THE MANTUANS FOR THE NINETEENTH CENTENARY OF VIRGIL'S DEATH.

I.

Roman Virgil, thou that singest
 Ilion's lofty temples robed in fire, Ilion falling, Rome arising, wars, and filial faith, and Dido's pyre ;

II.

Landscape-lover, lord of language
 more than he that sang the Works and Days,
All the chosen coin of fancy flashing out from many a golden phrase ;

III.

Thou that singest wheat and woodland,
 tilth and vineyard, hive and horse and herd ;
All the charm of all the Muses often flowering in a lonely word ;

IV.

Poet of the happy Tityrus piping underneath his beechen bowers ; Poet of the poet-satyr whom the laughing shepherd bound with flowers ;

V.

Chanter of the Pollio, glorying in the blissful years again to be, Summers of the snakeless meadow, unlaborious earth and oarless sea ;

VI.

Thou that seest Universal Nature moved by Universal Mind;
Thou majestic in thy sadness at the doubtful doom of human kind;

VII.

Light among the vanish'd ages;
star that gildest yet this phantom shore;
Golden branch amid the shadows,
kings and realms that pass to rise no more;

VIII.

Now thy Forum roars no longer, fallen every purple Caesar's dome—Tho' thine ocean-roll of rhythm sound for ever of Imperial Rome—

IX.

Now the Rome of slaves hath perish'd, and the Rome of freemen holds her place,
I, from out the Northern Island
sunder'd once from all the human race,

X.

I salute thee, Mantovano,
I that loved thee since my day began,
Wielder of the stateliest measure ever moulded by the lips of man.

 Aeneas Turnusque ruunt per proelia ; nunc, nunc fluctuat ira intus ; rumpuntur nescia vinci pectora ; nunc totis in vulnera viribus itur.
 Murranum hic, atavos et avorum antiqua sonantem nomina, per regesque actum genus omne Latinos, 530 praecipitem scopulô atque ingentis turbine saxi excutit effunditque solo ; hunc lora et inga subter provolvere rotae ; crebro super ungula pulsu incita nec domini memorum proculcat equorum.
 ille ruenti Hylo animisque inmane frementi 535 occurrit, telumque aurata ad tempora torquet :
 olli per galeam fixo stetit hasta cerebro.
 dextera nec tua te, Graium fortissime, Cretheu, eripuit Turno ; nec di texere Cupencum, Aenea veniente, sui ; dedit obvia ferro 540
 pectora, nec misero clipei mora profuit aerei.
 te quoque Laurentes viderunt, Aeole, campi oppetere et late terram consternere tergo ;
 occidis, Argivae quem non potuere phalanges sternere, nec Priami regnorum eversor Achilles ; 545 hic tibi mortis erant metae, domus alta sub Ida, Lyrnesi domus alta, solo Laurente sepulchrum.
 totae adeo conversae acies, omnesque Latini, omnes Dardanidae, Mnestheus acerque Serestus, et Messapus equum domitor, et fortis Asilas, 550 Tuscorumque phalanx, Euandrique Arcades alae, pro se quisque viri summa nituntur opum vi :

nec mora nec requies ; vasto certamine tendunt.

hic mentem Aeneae genetrix pulcherrima misit, iret ut ad muros, urbique adverteret agmen 555
ocius et subita turbaret clade Latinos.

ille, ut vestigans diversa per agmina Turnum huc atque huc acies circumtulit, aspicit urbem immunem tanti belli atque inpune quietam.

continuo pugnae accendit maioris imago ; 560

Mnesthea Sergestumque vocat fortemque Serestum ductores, tumultumque capit, quo cetera Teuorum concurrit legio, nec scuta aut spicula densi deponunt. celso medius stans aggere fatur :

'ne qua meis esto dictis mora ; Iuppiter hac stat ;
neu quis ob inceptum subitum mihi segnior ito. 566

urbem hodie, causam belli, regna ipsa Latini, ni frenum accipere et victi parere fatentur, eruum et aequa solo fumantia culmina ponam.

scilicet exspectem, libeat dum proelia Turno 570 nostra pati, rursusque velit concurrere victus ?

hoc caput, o cives, haec belli summa nefandi :

ferte faces propere, foedusque reposcite flammis.'

dixerat, atque animis pariter certantibus omnes dant cuneum, densaque ad muros mole feruntur. 575

scalae improviso subitusque apparuit ignis.

discurrunt alii ad portas primosque trucidant, ferrum alii torquent et obumbrant aethera telis.

ipse inter primos dextram sub moenia tendit

Aeneas, magnaue incusat voce Latinum, 580 testaturque deos, iterum se ad proelia cogi, bis iam Italos hostes, haec iam altera foedera rumpi.

exoritur trepidos inter discordia cives:
urbem alii reserare iubent et pandere portas Dardanidis, ipsumque trahunt in moenia regem; 585 arma ferunt alii et pergunt defendere muros.
inclusas ut cum latebroso in pumice pastor vestigavit apes fumoque inplevit amaro; illae intus trepidae rerum per cerea castra discurrunt, magnisque acuunt stridoribus iras; 590 volvitur ater odor tectis; tum murmure caeco intus saxa sonant; vacuas it fumus ad auras.

accidit haec fessis etiam fortuna Latinis, quae totam luctu concussit funditus urbem.
regina ut tectis venientem prospicit hostem, 595 incessi muros, ignes ad tecta volare, nusquam acies contra Rutulas, nulla agmina Turni:
infelix pugnae iuvenem in certamine credit extinctum et, subito mentem turbata dolore, se causam clamat crimenque caputque malorum, 600
multaque per maestum demens effata furorem purpureos moritura manu discindit amictus, et nodum informis leti trabe nectit ab alta.
quam cladem miserae postquam accipere Latinae, filia prima manu flores Lavinia crines 605 et roseas laniata genas, tum cetera circum turba furit; resonant late plangoribus aedes.

hinc totam infelix vulgatur fama per urbem :
 demittunt mentes ; it scissa veste Latinus, coniugis attonitus fatiſ urbiſque ruina, 610
 canitiem in mundo perfuſam pulvere turpans, [multaque ſe incuſat, qui non acceperit ante Dardanium Aenean, generumque adſciverit ultro.]

interea extremo bellator in aequore Turnus palantes ſequitur paucos, iam ſegnior atque 615
 iam minus atque minus ſucceſſu laetus equorum.
 attulit hunc illi caecis terroribus aura commixtum clamorem, arrectasque inpulit aures confuſae ſonus urbiſ et inlaetabile murmur.
 'hei mihi, quid tanto turbantur moenia luctu ? 620 quiſve ruit tantus diſſerſa clamor ab urbe ?'
 ſic ait, adductiſque amens ſubſiſtit habeniſ.
 atque huic, in faciem ſoror ut converſa Metiſci aurigae currumque et equos et lora regebat, talibus occurrit dictiſ : 'hac, Turne, ſequamur 625
 Troiugenaeſ, qua prima viam victoria pandit ;
 ſunt alii, qui tecta manu defendere poſſint.
 ingruit Aeneae Italiſ et proelia miſcet, hinc et noſ ſaeva manu mittamur funera Teuciſ :
 nec numero inferior, pugnae nec honore recedeſ.' 630
 Turnuſ ad haec :

'o ſoror, et dudum adgnovi, cum prima per artem foedera turbasti teque haec in bella dedisti, et nunc nequiquam fallis dea. ſed quiſ Olympo demiffam tantos voluit te ferre labores ? 635 an fratris miseri letum ut crudele videres?

nam quid ago? aut quae iam spondet fortuna salutem?

vidi oculos ante ipse meos me voce vocantem Murranum, quo non superat mihi carior alter, oppetere ingentem atque ingenti vulnere victum. 640
occidit infelix, ne nostrum dedecus Ufens aspiceret; Teuceri potiuntur corpore et armis.
exscindine domos—id rebus defuit unum—perpetiar? dextra nec Drancis ~~dieta~~ refellam?
terga dabo, et Turnum fugientem haec terra videbit? 645

usque adeone mori miserum est? vos o mihi Manes este boni, quoniam Superis aversa voluntas.
sancta ad vos anima, atque istius inscia culpa descendam, magnorum haud umquam indignus avorum.'

vix ea fatus erat: medios volat ecce per hostes vectus equo spumante Saces, adversa sagitta 651
saucius ora, ruitque inplorans nomine Turnum:
'Turne, in te suprema salus; miserere tuorum.
fulminat Aeneas armis, summasque minatur deiecturum arces Italum exscidioque daturum; 655
iamque faces ad tecta volant: in te ora Latini, in te oculos referunt; mussat rex ipse Latinus, quos generos vocet aut quae sese ad foedera flectat.
praeterea regina, tui fidissima, dextra occidit ipsa sua, lucemque exterrita fugit. 660 here Turnus is the son of the king of the Latins as he has been previously mentioned in the poem the name of the king is not given but it is the same as in the Roman edition of the poem solī pro portis Messapus et acer Atinas sustentant acies : circum hos utrimque phalanges stant densae, strictisque seges mucronibus horret ferrea : tu currum deserto in gramine versas.'

obstipuit varia confusus imagine rerum 665

Turnus et obtutu tacito stetit : aestuat iugens uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu et furiis agitatus amor et conscia virtus.

ut primum discussae umbrae et lux reddita menti, ardentes oculorum orbes ad moenia torsit 670

turbidus, eque rotis magnam respexit ad urbem.
ecce autem, flammis inter tabulata volutus ad caelum undabat vertex turrimque tenebat, turrim, compactis trabibus quam eduxerat ipse subdideratque rotas pontesque instraverat altos. 675

'iam iam fata, soror, superant ; absiste morari ; quo deus et quo dura vocat fortuna, sequamur.
stat conferre manum Aeneae, stat quidquid acerbi est

morte pati, neque me indecorem, germana, videbis amplius. hunc, oro, sine me furere ante furorem.'
dixit, et e curru saltum dedit ocius arvis, 681

perque hostes per tela ruit, maestamque sororem deserit ac rapido cursu media agmina rumpit.
ac veluti montis saxum de vertice praeceps cum ruit avulsum vento, seu turbidus imber 685 proluit aut annis solvit sublapsa vetustas, fertur in abruptum magno mons improbus actu, exultatque solo, silvas armenta virosque involvens secum: disiecta per agmina Turnus sic urbis ruit ad muros, ubi plurima fuso 690 sanguine terra madet, striduntque hastilibus aerae, significatque manu et magno simul incipit ore:

 'parcite iam, Rutuli, et vos tela inhibete, Latini;
 quaecumque est fortuna, mea est; me verius unum pro vobis foedus luere et decernere ferro.' 695 discessere omnes medii spatiumque dedere.

at pater Aeneas, audito nomine Turni, deserit et muros et summas deserit arces, praecipitatque moras omnes, opera omnia rumpit laetitia exsultans horrendumque intonat armis: 700 quantus Athos, aut quantus Eryx, aut ipse, coruscis cum fremit ilicibus, quantus, gaudetque nivali vertice se attollens pater Appenninus ad auras.
 iam vero et Rutuli certatim et Troes et omnes convertere oculos Itali, quique alta tenebant 705
 moenia, quique imos pulsabant ariete muros, armaque deposuere umeris. stupet ipse Latinus ingentes, genitos diversis partibus orbis, inter se coiisse viros et cernere ferro.
 atque illi, ut vacuo patuerunt aequore campi, 710
 procursu rapido, coniectis eminus hastis, invadunt Martem clipeis atque aere sonoro.
 dat gemitum tellus; tum crebros ensibus ictus congeminant; fors et virtus miscentur in unum.

NOTES.

1-17. Turnus sees that the Latins, dispirited by their ill-success, look to him to take the field as their champion. Furious as a wounded lion he accordingly bids King Latinus arrange a single combat between himself and Aeneas, the issue of which shall end the war.

1. infractos] 'broken,' i.e. in spirit, so that they 'had become faint-hearted' (defecisse). adverso Marte: i.e. by their failure in the combat described in the last Book, during which Camilla was slain.

2. sua] Emphatic by position, like se in the next clause: they themselves had failed, and now it was of his promises that they 'claimed the due fulfilment.' reposco here is not 'to ask back,' but 'to ask for something which is due'; re often has this sense in composition; cf. refer, 76, 'duly deliver' of a message, and reddo commonly, e.g. of a postman 'delivering' a letter. The 'promise' referred to is that made by Turnus (11. 438 seq.) of meeting Aeneas in single combat.

3. ultro] This word, connected with ultra, often describes action which goes beyond what might be expected. Turnus might be expected to share the depression of his fellow-countrymen, but instead he 'blazes out in fury unappeasable. The word is variously rendered 'of himself,' 'of his own accord,' 'unprompted,' or 'at once,' but there is no close English equivalent. Cf. 613 n.

4. Poenorum] i.e. the Carthaginians. The lions of North Africa were noted at Rome.

5. sancius ille ...] 'then at last, look you, when wounded ... a lion advances to battle.' ille is deictic, and draws marked attention to the subject of the sentence; cf. 11. 809, ac velut ille, prius quam tela inimica sequantur, | continuo in montes sese arius abdidit altos | occiso pastore lupus, 'and as, in last 6 innocent T suffer. Suffering innocent is one of greatest qualities in V - large universal appeal & V.

look you, before hostile darts can pursue him, ... a wolf' The word also goes closely with sancius: it is 'when wounded, look you' and 'then only' (tum demum) that the lion attacks, just as Turnus is only stung to action by the unspoken taunts of the Latins.

6. movet arma] 'advances battle'; a military phrase; cf. Livy, 7. 29, adversus Samnites ... mota arma, 'war was begun.' comantes toros: 'the masses of his mane.' torus (perhaps from sterno = storus, or else from the same root as τύλος) is commonly used of (1) a couch and (2) a bulging mass of muscles, but can describe anything which 'bulges' out, and the adj. comantes here makes its meaning plain.

7. latronis] This word, which describes (1) a mercenary soldier and (2), more usually, a brigand or assassin, is used with a certain contempt, as though the lion scorned the hunter who had attacked him by stealth.

9. accenso] 'kindled (with rage)'; cf. ardet, line 3. 'Violence' is the special characteristic of Turnus in Virgil, who applies the term to him only (cf. line 45; 10. 151; 11. 354, 376); this habitual violence is now increased by rage at his disgrace.

10. turbidus] i.e. in the 'wild,' 'disordered,' or 'troubled' speech of passion; cf. Hamlet, 1. 5. 133, 'These are but wild and whirling words, my lord.'

11. nihil est, quod ..] 'No need for these coward followers of Aeneas to recall their promise or repudiate their pledge.' The pledge is the offer to meet Turnus made by Aeneas, 11. 115-118. Sidgwick rightly says, "nihil est quod, 'there is no reason why,' quod being used relatively just as quid is used interrogatively."

13. congregior] stronger and more graphic than the future. patēr et: the final syllable of pater is lengthened by ictus, and, possibly, also with some recollection of the original length of the syllable, cf. πατήρ. So too 68, ebūr, aut; 422, dolōr, omnis; 550, domitōr et; 668, amōr et; and with the third person sing. act. of verbs stabāt; huc: 883, erīt ? o. concipe foedus: 'draw up the compact' (cf. Hamlet, 1. 1. 86 seq.). concipere is technically used of 'drawing up' something according to the strict formula (conceptis verbis), e.g. concipere radimonium, iusiurandum ('a form of oath'), stipulationem, etc. Here the compact as to the terms of the proposed single combat is not only to be drawn up formally, but ratified by a solemn sacrifice (cf. fer sacra). The terms of the compact are given in lines 14-17.

15. desertorem Asiae] 'this Asian runaway.' Both words are contemptuous, for Asiae suggests the Roman scorn of Orientals. sedeant...: a parenthesis full of bitter indignation against his countrymen, who can 'sit and gaze' while their chief hazards his life in their behalf; cf. the next line where he says that he will 'alone refute the general charge' of cowardice under which they labour. See too ll. 460.

17. aut...] 'or (i.e. if I fail to slay him) let him hold sway over the vanquished, let Lavinia be yielded as his bride.'

18-53. Latinus answers: 'Thy passion, valiant youth, makes calm deliberation on my part, the more needful. Thou hast no lack of wealth, and there are many noble maidens whom thou mayest wed, while the oracles forbid me to give my daughter to any of her former suitors, and by refusing to Aeneas her promised hand I have brought disaster and bloodshed upon my people. Shouldst thou fall, think of my shame and thy sire's grief.' These soothing words only excite the rage of Turnus, and he demands the right to defend his own cause with his own sword.

18. olli...] Note the slow spondees marking the calm of Latinus in contrast with the rage of Turnus. sedato)(turbidus, 10.

19. praestans animi] 'excelling in spirit,' 'gallant-hearted.' animi might be gen. of respect (Kenn. Pub. Sc. Gr. § 1358; Roby, S. G. 526) like integer acri, acri mator, 5. 73, but is so constantly used as a locative case (like domi, humi) that it is safer so to take it; cf. 6. 322, sortemque animi ('in his mind') miseratus iniquam; 4. 203, amens animi ('mad in mind'); Lucr. 1. 136, nec me animi fallit; and elsewhere in Virgil animi furens, inops, infelix, dubius, while in prose animi aeger, anxius; animi pendere, cruciari, and the like are common.

quantum...] 'as much as thou dost excel... so much the more earnestly is it just that I deliberate...' quantum is the cognate acc. used adverbially, or it may be said to express 'the extent of action' in the verb exsuperas (Roby, S. G. 461).

23. manu] Cf. 627 n. necnon...: 'moreover Latinus has gold and good will,' i.e. so as to satisfy your desires if your own possessions do not suffice.

25. nec genus indecores] 'of not ignoble birth' = of very noble birth; so, too, haud mollia is really = 'very hard.' This rhetorical figure, called litotes (λιτότης, a making smooth) or meiosis (μείωσις, a making less) is very frequent in poetry; cf. 50, haud debile = 'very strong'; 76; 229, haud nescia, 'well-versed'; also 619 n.

26. simul hoc animo hauri] 'therewith drink thou this into thy soul,' i.e. take heed to it; cf. for hauri 945 n. and 10. 648, animo spem turbidus haurit. But the intolerable elision in the sixth foot has no parallel, and, if the words are genuine, we must take haec in line 25 of what Latinus has already said in contrast with hoc which describes what he is going to say, although such a contrast between haec and hoc is almost impossible, while the 'hard plain words' which Latinus asks permission to utter are clearly those which follow his request. Either this is the attempt of some grammarian to complete one of Virgil's unfinished lines (cf. 631), or it may be one of the 'props' (tibicines) which he is said to have occasionally inserted to make up a line until he could revise his work. Conington strangely leaves the line without comment.

27. me natam ...] The prohibition to give his daughter 'to any of her ancient suitors' had been uttered by the oracle of Faunus (see 7. 95 seq.), which declared that she should wed a foreign prince.

28. canebant] Oracles were always uttered in hexameter verse, and so canere is constantly used in connection with them = 'declare' or 'foretell.' homines: i.e. augurs, soothsayers, and the like.

29. cognato sanguine] 'by ties of blood.' Venilia, mother of Turnus, was sister to Amata, the wife of Latinus.

30. vincla omnia] i.e. as the next line shows the 'bonds' (1) of his plighted word and (2) of his obedience to the gods.

31. genero] i.e. Aeneas, to whom he had promised his daughter, see Intr. p. xv. inpia: 'unholy,' because he was resisting the declared will of heaven, cf. lines 27, 28, and 7. 584. The hiatus in genero; arma is aided by the pause; but cf. 535 n.

32. ex illo] 'from that' = 'in consequence'; but the meaning 'from that time' is not excluded.

33. primus] 'above all.'

34. vix urbe ...] 'scarcely with our walls can we guard the hopes (or 'fortunes') of Italy.' They were defeated in the field and not secure even within their walls.

35. recalent] The prefix re- perhaps marks an alteration in the condition described by the verb: the stream is now hot instead of cold; cf. replere = make full instead of empty.

37. quo referor ...] 'why (lit. 'to what end?') am I so often beaten back? What madness changes my purpose?' Latinus asks why he so often 'goes back' (as we say) from the resolution which he is bound ultimately to carry out of accepting Aeneas as his son. For quo = 'to what purpose?' see Wilkins on Hor. Ep. 1. 5. 12.

Conington gives: "'Whither am I being carried backwards and forwards?' implying that he is distracted among the multitude of thoughts and plans," but there is no question of Latinus being distracted between a number of plans. He sees his proper course clearly, but allows considerations such as those mentioned in lines 29, 30 to hold him back.

38. Turno extincto] 'when Turnus is dead.')(incolumi: 'while he is still uninjured.' socios adscire: 'to welcome them (the Trojans) as allies.'

41. fors dicta refutet] Being compelled to use the ill-omened words, 'if I shall have betrayed thee to death,' Latinus before he completes the phrase interposes this prayer in order to avert the omen.

42. conubia nostra] 'a union with our house.'

43. respice ...] 'have regard to the changeful issues of war.' bello is perhaps abl. = 'in war,' or more probably dative either 'of the possessor' ('the changes which belong to war') or 'ethic' ('which affect war'), and so hardly distinguishable from the genitive, cf. 10. 160, eventus belli varios. It must be remembered that strict grammatical analysis of such phrases is really impossible, their peculiarity of shape being due to the poet's desire of avoiding what is commonplace, and there being no wish on his part to exclude any of the slight variations of meaning which may attach to an ambiguous form like bello.

46. exsuperat ...] 'it rises higher (cf. line 20, and 2. 759, exsuperant flammæ) and grows angrier from the remedy.'

medendo is abl. of the gerund, used as a verbal noun = 'by the healing,' 'by the attempt to heal,' a use which is very common in Virgil, e.g. habendo, 'for handling,' 88; cantando, 'by singing,' colendo, 'by cultivation,' arando, 'by ploughing'; and similarly in the acc. inter agendum, 'during the doing (of a thing),' ante domandum, 'before breaking in (a colt),' etc.

aegrescit medendo] A fine instance of terse antithesis. The soft speech of Latinus acts like some remedy which only aggravates a disease, makes a wound angrier, or a fever fiercer.

47. institit] much more vigorous than the weakly supported incipit. The word suggests vigour and movement (cf. insistere viam), and is also used 4. 533, sic adeo insistit of Dido's 'outbreak' into reproaches after a sleepless night.

48. pro me ... pro me] emphatic repetition, still further strengthened by the position of the second pro me. The tone is angry; the speaker objects to being treated like a child who cannot help himself or take care of himself. So, too, optime is the politeness of passion; cf. too sinas, 'permit.'

49. letumque ...] 'to barter death for fame,' cf. 5. 230, vitamque volunt pro laude pacisci, in exactly the same sense. When you wish to purchase fame, you may be said to offer your 'life' or 'death' as the price.

50. et nos] 'we too,' i.e. as well as Aeneas. hand debile: litotes, see 25 n. tela ... ferrumque, by hendiadys (cf. 869 n.), = iron-headed darts; ferrum can hardly be = 'sword,' as opposed to 'darts' or 'spears,' because of spargimus.

52. longe ...] 'Far away shall he find his goddess mother to hide in cloud his womanly flight, while she conceals herself,' etc. In Homer the deities continually veil their own presence, and rescue their favourite heroes from danger by this device of concealment in a cloud; cf. Il. 20. 443, where Apollo so saves Aeneas from Achilles. The expression feminea nube is hard to translate; 'unmanly' and 'womanly cloud' are absurd in English. The adj. marks escaping by concealment in a cloud as a device which (though Homeric) no man would resort to.

quae tegat follows longe erit, as if Virgil had written non aderit, to which it is exactly equivalent. The clause et... umbris is made parallel with the clause quae... tegat (parataxis), though really it should be subordinate. Many editors try to make sese refer to Aeneas, saying that the whole relative clause gives the contents of a prayer which he offers to Venus—she shall not be present when he prays that she will conceal his flight and hide him.

54-80. Amata prays Turnus not to hazard his life, on which all their hope rests, but the beauty and blushes of Larinia only inflame his passion more, and he bids his squire Idmon carry his challenge to Aeneas.

54. nova sorte] This 'new fortune of the combat' is the unexpected turn it had taken by becoming a single combat between the two chiefs.

55. moritura tenebat] 'strove to stay him with the grasp of death.' In 62 Amata announces her resolve to die, and 600-603 does actually kill herself; but to render moritura 'resolved to die' or 'destined soon to die' is to anticipate the narrative too much. The word, no doubt, suggests that her death is imminent, but actually only expresses her deadly terror, her death-like aspect, as she seeks to detain him.

56. per has ego te lacrimas] The acc. te is governed by oro, 60, the acc. in adjurations being always thrown strongly forward and often violently misplaced (e.g. per te deos... oro, πρὸς σὲ θεῶν... ἱκεῖν) to give it emphasis. The second per has for its acc. the whole clause, si quis... animum, 'by whatever regard for A. touches thy soul'; cf. 6. 459, per superos et si qua fides tellure sub ima est; 2. 142; Soph. Phil. 469, πρὸς δ' εἴ τί σοι κατ' οἶκόν ἐστι προσφιλές.

57-59. spes... recumbit] A parenthetic statement of the grounds of her appeal. in te...: 'on thee all our sinking house rests'; he is the sole prop or pillar that can save it from falling.

60. desiste committere] For construction cf. 586 n.

61. isto certamine] 'in that thy combat.' iste here, as often, marks abhorrence—that combat which you desire but I detest. So we in English use 'your'; e.g. 'none of your French wishes for me.'

62. et me] 'me too'; picked up by simul = 'along with thee.'

63. lumina] i.e. light of day, which will be 'hateful' if Turnus dies.

64. lacrimis] with accepit: she 'heard her mother's utterance with tears.' But the word is also mentally supplied with flagrantes perfusa genas (for construction see 172) = 'bathing her burning cheeks (with tears).'

65. cui ...] 'while (lit. 'to whom') a deep blush kindled a flame, and mantled o'er her glowing face.' The blush is said to kindle a fire (ignem subicere) in her face, though strictly it is the inward fire which should create the blush.

67. Indum ...] The comparison is borrowed from Homer, Il. 4. 141:

ὥς δ' ὅτε τίς τ' ἐλέφαντα γυνή φοῖνικι μῆνη Μηρονὶς ἢ Κάειρα, παρήιον ἔμμεναι ἵππων ...

and Virgil renders μῆνη 'stained' by violaverit, but the word here cannot bear its usual bad sense (= 'desecrate,' 'profane,' 'defile') because the scarlet colour is clearly regarded, like the blush on Amata's cheeks, as lending new beauty to the ivory. It does so, however, only by 'doing violence' to its original purity, and there may be a suggestion that it is 'the violence' (violentia) of Turnus which colours Amata's face with scarlet. The use of ivory for every form of artistic decoration was universal in antiquity: Marquardt, Privatleben, 741.

68. ebūr, aut] See 13 n.

71. paucis] sc. verbis, 'briefly.'

72. omine tanto] 'with an omen so grievous,' i.e. as tears; cf. Sil. It. 3. 133, where Hannibal, as he sets forth against Rome, says to his wife, ominibus parce et lacrimis. To see soldiers off with cheering and good wishes (cf. 9. 310, prosequitur votis) is common everywhere, but the Romans attached special importance to avoiding any ill-omened word or act at the commencement of an enterprise. To 'send a person forth with weeping' was ominous of death.

4 73. neque ...] 'for neither is Turnus free to delay death';
1 i.e. nothing I can do can check the course of destiny. He feels that his hour is come ; he must do or die, and the sense of impending doom is strong in him.

Servius states that in his day commentators counted this as one of "the twelve insoluble" passages in Virgil, while in modern times some critics, considering the words of Turnus here inconsistent with his character, alter mortis into Martis. Certainly between critic and poet there is often a great gulf fixed.

75. Phrygio] contemptuous, cf. 99.

76. haud placitura] 'unwelcome,' because he throughout sneers at Aeneas as one who shirks the combat. refer : 'deliver,' cf. 2 n.

78. non Teucros agat] Non can be put for ne in prohibitions where there is, as here, a strong opposition—'no Trojans let him lead ... (but) with our own blood let us decide the fray.' Cf. Hor. Ep. 1. 18. 72, non ancilla tuum iecur ulceret ; Ov. A. A. 3. 129, non caris aures onerate lapillis ... munditiis capimur ; non sint sine lege capilli, and Nettleship's note here. Teucrum : this contracted form of the gen. plur. is common with names of peoples ; cf. Danaum, 349 ; Graium, 548 ; and with some nouns, e.g. equum, 128, socium, deum, etc.

80. quaeratur] 'be wooed (and won)'; cf. the common use of quaestus = 'that which is sought and gained,' 'gain.'

81-112. Turnus bids the attendants bring his chariot and divine steeds, arms himself for combat, and brandishing a mighty spear, which he had won in battle from the hero Actor, invokes its aid to slay his curled and perfumed rival, raging like a wild bull for battle. Aeneas too prepares himself, and soothes the fears of his followers by reminding them of his assured destiny.

It should be noted that this arming of Turnus is not for the actual combat (for that only takes place next day, cf. 113), but merely to assure himself that his armour is duly prepared and trustworthy. The real purpose of the two paragraphs (81-106 and 107-112) is to bring out in strong contrast the ungoverned fury of Turnus and the calm confidence of Aeneas.

81. dedit] 'uttered'; cf. 383 n.

83. Pilumno ...] Orithyia was wife of Boreas, who in Homer (Il. 20. 223) is the sire of the royal horses of Troy, just as Zephyrus is of the divine horses of Achilles (Il. 16. 150), early mythology—by a very natural image—personifying the winds as swift high-spirited steeds. Here Orithyia presents some of these half-divine steeds to the Italian deity Pilumnus, and he in turn bestows them on Turnus, who is his grandson (10. 76) or great-grandson (10. 619). Pilumnus is the brother of Picumnus (= Picus, grandfather of Latinus, 7. 48).

84. qui ...] So of the horses of Rhesus, Il. 10. 437, λευκότεροι χιόνος, θέλειν δ' ἀνέμοισιν ὁμοιοί. The subj. qui ... anteirent probably because qui=quum ii: they were to be his pride (decus), 'seeing that they surpassed ...'

85. properi aurigae] Homer's ὀτρηροὶ θεράποντες. manibusque ...: 'and stir their mettle, patting their chests with hollow palms.' In this intricate phrase Virgil takes advantage of the double meaning of pectus, which may be (1) the actual chest which is patted, or (2) the stout heart beneath it which the patting animates; cf. the common phrases forte, animosum, certum pectus. Note the imitative alliteration in line 86.

87. auro squalentem] 'with scales of gold'; Virgil regularly (cf. 8. 436; 9. 707; 11. 488) uses squama of the 'scales' or single plates of scale-armour, and possibly thinks of squaleo and squama as connected. In any case the idea suggested is not of a fish's scales, but of a dragon's. orichalco: ὀρείχαλκος, 'mountain copper,' an unknown metal resembling gold (hence often by false etymology written aurichalcum), but perhaps paler; cf. albo.

88. aptat habendo] 'fits for handling' or 'wearing,' cf. 46 n. He tries the sword and shield to see whether they exactly suit.

89. ensemque clipeumque] Cf. 181, fontesque fluviosque; 363, Chloreaque Sybarimque; 443, Antheusque Mnestheusque, and elsewhere tribulaque traheaeque, aestusque fluviosque, terrasque tractusque. Virgil is fond of thus beginning lines in imitation of Homer's lengthening of τε in such phrases as Λάμπων τε Κλύτιόν τε, Προδότην τε Κλύτιός τε. It will be observed that the lengthened que is usually followed by two consonants, the second of which is l or r. rubrae cornua cristae: the horns are projections on the top of the helmet into which the crests were fitted. See Bayfield, Homer's Iliad, Appendix A, on the words φάλος (= cornu), ἀμφίφαλος, τρυφάλεια = τετρυ-φάλεια, 'four-horned helmet.'

91. et Stygia ...] Steel was regularly tempered by being dipped in water (cf. S. 450: G. 4. 172), and some waters (e.g. that of the Bilbilis or Salo in Spain, Mart. 1. 49. 12) were supposed to have special virtues in that respect. The sword is dipped in the Styx to make it unbreakable, just as Achilles was made invulnerable by the same means.

94. tremementem] 'quivering.'

95. o numquam ...] 'that hast never failed my call'; he appeals to his spear as though it were a living being endowed with power to aid him. vocare is commonly used of 'invoking' the aid of a god.

96. te maxumus Actor] Supply prius gessit: 'thee Actor (once bore), thee now the hand of Turnus bears.'

97. da sternere] 'grant (me) to lay low.'

98. revulsam] 'torn back' or 'open,' i.e. by the spear.

99. semiviri Phrygis] 'the emasculate' or 'unmanned Phrygian.' The term 'Phrygian' is often used by Virgil contemptuously (cf. 75; 4. 103) with a suggestion of Oriental cowardice and effeminaey, and in semiviri there is also a reference to the eunuch priests of the Phrygian goddess Cybele.

In 4. 205 seq. the jealous Iarbas also jeers at Aeneas as 'a perfumed Paris with his eunuch train,' and Virgil's conception of Aeneas is clearly not that of a rude and rugged warrior, but rather of a handsome cavalier whose looks did not belie his divine mother.

100. calido ferro] i.e. with the calamistrum or 'curling-irons.'

101. totoque ...] To speak of 'fire flashing from angry eyes' is natural, but it is letting metaphor run riot to say that 'sparks leap from all his burning face.' Conington justly describes it as 'rather exaggerated,' but Sidgwick says that 'it may be paralleled in many languages,' neglecting, however, to support this assertion.

103-106. Almost repeated from G. 3. 232-234. prima : not 'for his first battle,' which would spoil the comparison with a skilled warrior like Turnus, but 'for the beginning of the fray'; cf. 735; 7. 601, mos erat ... cum prima movent in proelia Martem.

104. irasci in cornua] 'to throw his rage into his horns'; cf. Eur. Bacch. 743, ταῦροι ... εἰς κέρας θυμούμενοι.

105. ventosque ...] 'and harasses the wind with his blows.' He acts like a boxer who 'beats the air' (ventilare) in practice, etc.; cf. 5. 377 of Dares, et verberat ictibus auras; 1 Cor. ix. 26, οὕτως πυκτεύω ὥς οὐκ ἄερα δέρω.

107. maternis] The armour made by Vulcan which his mother Venus gave him; see 8. 608 seq.

108. acuit Martem] 'whets his warlike zeal'; cf. 590 magnis acuiunt stridoribus iras of the bees as they 'sharpen their wrath with a mighty buzzing.' The metaphor, of course, is from actually sharpening a weapon before battle.

109. foedere] i.e. the agreement mentioned in line 13, to 'settle' the war by single combat.

111. fata] i.e. the 'sure destinies' which, through all difficulties and dangers, guide him to his appointed goal as the founder in Italy of a city and an empire greater and more lasting than Troy.

112. leges] 'the conditions' to be embodied in the agreement which was to secure peace; cf. 315.

113-133. Next morning at daybreak the lists are prepared and thronged by the troops on both sides in martial array, while the women and old men crowd the roofs.

113. The construction is postera vix ... spargebat ... dies (cum ... efflant); campum ... parabant: 'scarce did the next dawn sprinkle ... with light (what time the sun's steeds first rise breathing brightness ...), when the heroes began to make ready' Virgil is very fond of following a clause introduced by vix with another introduced by 'and,' or, as here, put simply side by side with it where we should introduce the second clause with 'when'; cf. 2. 692 vix ea fatus erat ... subitoque fragore intonuit, 'scarce had he spoken when it thundered'; 3. 90 vix ... fatus eram ... tremere omnia visa (sunt),

'scarce had I spoken when all trembled.' The clause cum ... efflant describes the hour of dawn—'it was dawn, the time when the sun's steeds rise,' etc.

115. lucemque ...] The horses of the sun breath 'fire' or 'light'; cf. Pind. Ol. 7. 70, ὁ γενέθλιος ἀκτίνων πατήρ | πῦρ πνεόντων ἀρχὸς ἵππων.

118. dis communibus] The 'common gods' are the gods whom they invoke in common to ratify their compact.

120. velati limo] All mss. give lino, 'in linen,' but Servius states that before his time critics had pointed out that the true reading was limo, and says that limus was an apron, so-called from a cross-stripe of purple (purpura lima), used by attendants on magistrates, etc., though Gellius derives the word from its being worn 'cross-wise.' Virgil is very fond of using archaic and antiquarian words, and a rare word like this would almost certainly be corrupted by copyists. For tempora victi see 172 n.

121. pilata] 'densely-packed,' and so in artistic contrast with se fundunt; they crush through the 'crowded gates,' and then spread out. Servius distinctly states that in Varro pilatum agmen is = densum agmen, and quotes other writers for the adverb pilatim used of marching 'in close array.' Otherwise we should be tempted to take the word, like hastati, clipeati, etc., as = 'armed with the pilum' (as in Mart. 10. 48. 2, pilata cohors, where see Friedlander), and in that case too there would be an effective contrast between the javeline-bearing Italians and the host 'of Trojans and Etruscans with their varied weapons (i.e. each bearing their national weapons).'

124. haud secus ...] Virgil thus pointedly dwells on their being armed because of the general fight which is going to break out; see 266 seq.

126. volitant] 'move swiftly,' 'hasten hither and thither.'

127. genus] So 7. 213; Hor. Sat. 1. 6. 12; 2. 5. 63, iuvenis ... ab alto | demissum genus Aeneas = 'son' or 'descendant'; and below 198, genus duplex, 'twin children.'

128. equum] gen. plur., cf. 78 n.

129. utque ...] 'and when at the given signal each has withdrawn to his own portion of the lists,' i.e. when, in order to clear the lists, the spectators have withdrawn to the places severally assigned them.

131. studio effusae] 'in eager streams.'

133. portis ...] 'take their stand upon the towering gates.' Clearly not 'stand beside the gates,' for they would get no view, and sublimibus would have no force. The 'roof over the gate' is in ancient cities a regular post for watchmen; cf. 1 Sam. xviii. 24.

134-160. Juno summons the nymph Iuturna, the sister of Turnus, and prays her, as she herself can do no more, to save her brother by hindering the proposed combat.

134. e summo] with tumulo 136, 'from the hill's top that now is styled Alban (then the mountain had neither name ...) as she gazed beheld ...' According to Virgil's story Alba Longa was founded on this mountain by Ascanius, after which it became 'the Alban Mount,' famous for the temple of Jupiter Latiaris on its summit, and the Latin games (feriae Latinae) which were celebrated there.

Juno takes her seat on the Alban Mount just as in Homer the deities do so on Mount Ida when they wish to watch events at Troy.

139. diva deam] 'goddess (addressing) goddess'; their common deity is a bond of sympathy to which Juno appeals (cf. Hom. Od. 5. 95, εἰρωτᾷς μ' ἐλθόντα θεὰ θεόν). The assonance, too, of the phrase is clearly tempting to a poet. Many say that diva is a more ancient and dignified word than dea, but the distinction seems hard to maintain.

Iuturna was an Italian nymph or deity especially connected with streams of a healing character (Iuturna a iuvando), and Lutatius Catulus built a chapel to her in the Campus Martius, see Ov. Fast. 1. 463 and Class. Dict. Virgil here identifies her with the deified sister of Turnus.

140. hunc ...] 'this honour (i.e. of presiding over rivers, etc.) Jove, the high lord of heaven, dedicated to her in return for her ravished maidenhood.'

142. animo ...] Cf. Hom. Il. 5. 243, ἐμῷ κεχαρισμένε θυμῷ.

143. scis ut . .] 'thou knowest how I have preferred thee alone above all Latin maids, who . . .'

144. ingratum] 'thankless,' because the union too often brought only misery on the unhappy maiden. The epithet 'high-souled' seems inconsistent here, and also 878, with the cruelty with which Jupiter is charged, and Conington thinks that it is used 'in a half-ironical sense,' but more probably it is a mere imitation of the epic style, in which heroes and gods have always some stock epithet of distinction whatever their conduct. So, as Ladewig points out, 'Achilles in one breath addresses Agamemnon as κύδιστε and φιλοκτεανώτατε πάντων,' and cf. Soph. Phil. 344, διὸς τ' Ὀδυσσεύς, although the speaker professes to hate him; while with us such phrases as 'the unfairness of the right honourable gentleman' or 'the ignorance of my learned friend' would not suggest sarcasm.

146. disce . .] i.e. learn the grief that threatens you, so that you may not afterwards blame me for not warning you or seeking to prevent it.

147. qua . .] 'where Fortune seemed to permit and (while) the Fates allowed success to Latium... I guarded, but now (nunc, 149) . . .' qua = qua via; Juno used such path or means as Fortune allowed; with the next clause some such word as quoad, 'as long as,' must be supplied, as is shown by the antithetical nunc in 149. For cedere, cf. 185 n.

150. Parcarumque . .] Cf. Il. 22. 212, ῥέπε δ' Ἐκτορος αἰσιμον ἡμαρ, | ᾧχετο δ' εἰς Ἀἴδαο λίπεν δέ εἰ Φοῖβος Ἀπόλλων. When the 'day of doom' comes, the hero is left by his protecting deity. Here Juno adds that she must not only give way to destiny, but that she could 'not bear' (non possum = οὐ τλήσομαι, Hom. Il. 3. 305) to look upon the battle.

151. foedera] i.e. all the preliminary arrangements as described in 160 seq.

152. praesentius] The adj. praesens is continually used of deities who are 'present to assist' (e.g. Eccl. 1. 41; G. 1. 10), and then acquires the meaning of 'effective,' 'efficacious' (G. 2. 127; 3. 452) as here, or 'potent,' 'powerful' in a bad sense as line 245. In no case, however, is the sense of being actually 'present' or 'at hand' lost; so here Juturna will be actually 'present' to assist, and in 245 the omen is 'present' before the eyes of the spectators.

153. forsan ...] 'perchance a happier fortune will attend the wretched.' Juno suggests that bad luck must change sometime.

154. vix ea, cum ...] 'scarce had she ended when' ea is neut. plural, and some such verb as fata erat must be supplied; cf. 195, sic prior Aeneas, 'so first Aeneas (speaks)'; G. 4. 528, haec Proteus, 'thus Proteus.'

155. honestum] as often, 'comely,' 'beauteous.'

158. aut tu bella cie] The personal pronoun is frequently added pleonastically in the second of two imperative clauses to enforce the personal emphasis of the command; cf. Hor. Od. 1. 9. 15, nec dulces amores | sperne puer, neque tu choreas; Epist. 1. 2. 63. excute: this word is often used of 'driving away' or 'getting rid of with violence,' e.g. excute equo, curru, vallo; calce excute, 'kick out'; oculum excute, etc. So here it is = 'away with!'

159. auctor ego audendi] a fine rhetorical conclusion. 'Tis I who bid thee dare.' ego is emphatic; I, Juno, the Queen of heaven.

161-215. The chiefs—Latinus, Aeneas, and Turnus—come forward followed by the priests and victims. Then Aeneas swears by all the gods that, if Turnus prevails, the Trojans will withdraw, but that, if he himself conquers, it is not empire which he seeks but an everlasting union. Latinus takes a like oath, and vows that, as surely as the sceptre which he bears will never again put forth leaf, so surely will he never withdraw his word. Then the sacrifice is begun.

161. reges] The common nominative has no verb, but is immediately broken up, and the separate nominatives have each their own verb. Render, 'Meantime the princes advance, Latinus riding ... while Turnus comes ...' Cf. 277; Livy 24. 20, consules Marcellus retro, Nolam reddit, Fabius in Samnium processit; Hom. Od. 12. 73. ingenti mole: 'in mighty greatness'; probably of his general appearance in the four-horse car rather than strictly of his personal stature.

164. Solis avi specimen] 'the token of his grandsire, the Sun'; the crown adorned with golden rays is worn as a token or sign of his descent from the sun. Cf. Hesiod, Theogn. 1011, Κίρκη δ' Ἡελίου θυγάτηρ ... γείνατο ... Ἀγριον ἤδ' Ἀατῖνον. and the lines, though certainly not Hesiod's, show that the genealogy is an early one. Virgil gives a different genealogy, 7. 47 seq. bigis in albis: 'in his car drawn by white steeds.'

165. bina] simply poetical for 'two.'

167. sidereo clipeo] Probably 'flashing like a star,' but in Hom. Il. 16. 134 many explain θώρηκα ἀστερόεντα as 'studded with stars,' i.e. with star-like ornaments. coelestibus armis: see 107 n.

168. altera] 'second,' i.e. after Aeneas.

172. conversi lumina] 'having their eyes turned,' or 'turning their eyes.' The acc. in cases like this used to be explained as an acc. of respect, 'turned as to their eyes,' but it is clear that the passive part. in Latin is often used, almost like a Greek middle, with a certain active force. Cf. 65, perfusa genas; 120, verbena tempora vincti, 'having their brows bound with vervain'; 224, formam adsimulata, 'making her shape like'; 416, faciem circumdata nimbo; 599, mentem turbata; 606, laniata genas, 'tearing her cheeks.'

Standing with the face to the east was common in supplication (cf. S. 48; Soph. O. C. 477, χοὰς χέασθαι στάντα πρὸς πρῶτην ἑω), clearly as suggesting a joyful issue.

173. fruges salsas] The mola salsa, consisting of roasted barley-meal mixed with salt, and offered by itself or sprinkled on the head of the victim. et tempora ...: 'and mark the heads of the victims with the steel,' i.e. by cutting off a lock of hair which was then burnt, thus dedicating the victim to the deity; cf. 4. 698; 6. 245. The technical Greek phrase for these initial acts is κατάρχεσθαι τῶν ἱερῶν.

174. paterisque ...] 'and from goblets besprinkle the altars.' libo usually takes an acc. of that which is sprinkled or poured on the altar.

175. stricto ense] Clearly the sword is drawn because he is going to swear to the terms on which he draws it. Similarly Latinus, 206 seq., employs his sceptre to confirm his oath. In both cases the dramatic act gives vividness to the scene.

179. iam melior, iam ...] 'now, now at last kindlier, I pray.' It is Juno's persistent hate which throughout the poem causes all the misfortunes of Aeneas; cf. l. 8-11, and Intro., p. xiii.

181. Fontesquē Fluviosque] Cf. 89 n. quaeque ... : 'all the majesty of high Heaven,' i.e. all the powers of the sky. He is thinking not so much of the gods as of the great elemental powers of the Sky in opposition to those of Earth and Sea; cf. the parallel oath of Latinus, 197.

183. cesserit ...] 'if victory shall perchance pass to Turnus.' fors and fors et (e.g. ll. 50, fors et vota facit) are often used quite adverbially = 'perchance.' fors et vota facit may be explained as parataxis, the two parallel clauses 'there is a chance and he is doing this' being used instead of 'there is a chance that he is doing this'; but where fors is used alone all sense of such an origin of the idiom seems lost.

184. convenit] impersonally, 'it is agreed.'

185. cedet] 'shall retire from,' i.e. quit. Note the different use of cedo with dat. in 183 = 'pass to,' 'pass into the hands of,' for which cf. 148, cedere res Latio, 'that fortune should pass to Latium,' 'that L. should prosper.'

187. sin ...] 'but if Victory shall grant us that the (issue of the) combat be with us,' i.e. that the field be ours. Mars is here 'the issue of the battle,' as in such phrases as Marte dubio, prospero, incerto, communi, adverso.

189. non ego ... nec ... nec] The negative is repeated for the sake of great emphasis; cf. Ecl. 4. 55; 5. 25. The construction is regular in Greek (οὐκ ἐγὼ οὐτε ... οὐτε ...) but rare in Latin. Render, 'Not mine shall it be to bid Italians be subject to Trojans, nor seek I empire for myself.'

190. paribus] emphatic: he repudiates dominion, and only seeks that 'under equal laws both unconquered peoples may bring themselves into everlasting union.' These fine lines were quoted by Pitt in advocating the union with Ireland.

192. sacra deosque] 'holy things and gods'; sacra includes all rites and instruments of worship; deos refers especially to the sacred fire of Vesta and the images of the Penates, which he had brought with him from Troy. socer arma ... imperium sollemne socer: note carefully the chiasitic order. This order is a great favourite with Latin writers in antithetical sentences, and is so called because in such an instance as ratio consentit, repugnat oratio (Cic. de Fin. 3. 3.), if the two first words are written over the second two and the contrasted words joined, the lines joining them form X, the Greek chi. The word sover is especially emphatic; it is as his father-in-law that Aeneas yields to Latinus—‘As my sire let Latinus retain command in battle, as my sire (let him retain) his wonted sway (i.e. his royal authority).’

197. haec eadem ... iuro] ‘By these same powers .. I swear.’ Like δμνυμι, iuro often takes an acc. of the deity in whose name the oath is sworn. The acc. is really cognate because the name of the deity forms the oath.

198. Latonaque genus duplex] the ‘twin children’ are Apollo and Diana, whom Latona bore to Jove in Delos.

200. Genitor] ‘the great Sire,’ i.e. Jupiter, the father of men and gods, who is invoked last not only as the greatest of the deities, but as Ζεὺς Ὀρκιος, the god who especially ‘sanctifies covenants’ by blasting perjurers with his thunderbolt.

201. medios ignes] ‘this intervening fire.’ medios is used in two senses, the first literal, for Aeneas and Latinus stand with the altar between them, and the second metaphorical, for the ‘fire and the gods’ are to be the ‘mediators’ of their covenant. A ‘mediator’ is one who stands between two parties, and so Moses, the mediator (ὁ μεσίτης) of the covenant, is described as standing between Jehovah on Sinai and Israel on the plain below.

203. quo ...] ‘howsoever (lit. ‘whithersoever’) the event shall fall.’ nec me ...: ‘nor shall any violence make me of my free will swerve aside, no, not if it should hurl the land into the sea, confounding them in a flood, and let loose heaven into hell.’

206. ut] ‘even as.’ The passage is copied from the oath of Achilles, II. 1. 234:

ναὶ μὰ τόδε σκῆπτρον, τὸ μὲν οὔποτε φύλλα καὶ ὄχρους φύσει, ἐπεὶ δὴ πρῶτα τομὴν ἐν δρεσσι λέλοιπεν, οὔδ’ ἀναθηλήσει· περὶ γὰρ ῥὰ ἐ χαλκὸς ἔλεψε φύλλα τε καὶ φλοιόν· νῦν αὐτέ μιν νῆες Ἀχαιῶν ἐν παλάμῃ φορέουσι δίκασπόλοι.

208. cum semel ...] 'since once (for all) ... it has left the parent tree and let fall ... beneath the knife.' imo: because stirps = a tree-trunk, is regularly masc. in Virgil, cf. 770, 781, but fem. when used metaphorically, cf. 6. 684, magna de stirpe nepotum.

211. dedit gestare] 'gave it to carry.' This epexegetic inf. is very common in Virgil after do; cf. 5. 247, dat ferre talentum, 'gives to take away'; 260, loricam ... donat habere; and so Hom. Il. 23. 512, δῶκε δ' ἄγειν ἐτάροισι ὑπερθύμοισι γυναῖκα | καὶ τρίποδ' ὥτ' ὅντα φέρειν.

214. in flammam] i.e. so that the blood poured upon the altar. et viscera vivis : the entrails were offered almost before the victim had ceased to breathe; cf. G. 2. 194, lunibus et pandis fumantia reddimus exta.

216-243. The Rutulians see that the combatants are ill-matched, and Iuturna, taking the form of the warrior Cumers, taunts them with shrinking from a foe inferior in numbers and in valour, while, like sluggards, they allow Turnus to win name and fame by sacrificing himself for them. She thus excites their eagerness for a general engagement.

216. videri, misceri] historic infinitives.

218. tum magis] opposed to iamdudum. They had 'long' been uneasy, thinking the combat unfair, but 'then (they were) still more so, as they see (the combatants) closer their strength unequal.' The acc. after cernunt is eos (= 'the combatants') to be supplied from ea pugna, and non viribus aequis is probably a simple ablative of quality, 'when they see them of unequal strength,' or it might be abl. absolute, 'their strength being unequal.' The obvious suggestion non viribus aequos makes the construction more commonplace and less Virgilian.

219. adiuvat] 'aids,' i.e. increases the feeling of uneasiness. The figure of Turnus here as he steps forward 'with silent gait' and 'down-cast eye,' his cheeks 'worn' and his face 'wan,' is in striking contrast with his previous 'violence,' and marks that the sense of impending doom overpowers him, while it naturally increases the anxiety of the Rutulians.

221. tabentes] Most MSS. have pubentes. iuvenali: 'youthful,' and so unfit to face a tried warrior like Aeneas.

222. quem ... sermonem] 'and when Juturna marked such discourse spreading.' The previous lines only describe the thoughts of the onlookers, but it is assumed that these thoughts find expression in words.

226. et ipse ...] Strict grammar would require et qui ipse erat acerrimus.

227. dat sese] 'flings herself'; cf. 383 n. haud nescia rerum: 'well skilled (cf. 25 n.) in her task.'

228. serit] An admirable word. Rumours only need 'sowing' to spring up and bear fruit a hundredfold. Our phrase 'to propagate scandal' is not dissimilar.

229. cunctis talibus] Both words are emphatic and correspond with numero and viribus in the next line. 'Is not all such a host as this,' asks Juturna, 'a match for the foe alike in numbers and in valour?' talibus is deictic; Juturna points to the warriors around her.

231. omnes] emphatic—'Lo, these are all, all both the Trojans and Arcadians and those fate-guided hosts of Etruria arrayed against Turnus—yet scarcely, should but the half of us join battle, do we find a foe'; i.e. all our foes together cannot bring one man against our two.

232. fatalesque ...] The Etrurians (see p. xv.) were the allies of Evander the Arcadian, and had driven out their tyrant Mezentius, who had sought refuge with Turnus; but they had been warned by the soothsayers that any attack on Turnus would fail unless they obtained 'a foreign leader' (S. 499). Such a leader they had found in Aeneas, and they therefore thought themselves secure 'under the guidance of fate' (cf. 11. 232, fatalem Aenean manifesto numine ferri). The phrase fatales manus is clearly contemptuous; the Etruscans (gens dedita superstitionibus, Livy 5. 1) only dare to face Turnus when they think themselves guarded by fate.

234. Ille quidem ... nos (236)] κεῖνος μὲν ... ἡμεῖς δέ. The omission of 'but' in contrasted clauses in Latin is almost regular; the contrasted words, however, must be placed, as here, in prominent and guiding positions. ad superos ...: 'shall be raised in fame to the gods ... and borne undying on the lips of men'; i.e. he shall become one of those deified heroes whose names are ever on men's lips. The latter part of the phrase is from the famous epithet which Ennius wrote for himself :

Nemo me lacrimis decoret, nec funera fletu Faxit. Cur? volito viru' per ora vivum.

236. dominis] 'masters'; a very strong word in Latin, describing one who has 'ownership' (dominium) over a slave.

237. lenti] 'dull,' 'like sluggards.'

240. ipsi] 'even the Laurentines,' i.e. and not merely the Rutulians.

241. iam] Be careful of rendering this 'but now' or 'lately' as opposed to nunc, for iam cannot mean this. The word goes with requiem and sperabant—'those who by this time were hoping for rest,' 'who were hoping for rest at last.'

242. foedusque ...] 'and pray for the undoing of the treaty.'

244-310. Juturna further excites the Rutuli by the omen of an eagle, which, after seizing a swan, is at last driven off by the other swans. Tolumnius, the augur, interprets this of the driving away of Aeneas, and commences the battle by shooting an arrow which slays one of the sons of Gylippus. Then a general combat begins, and many warriors are slain.

245. praesentius] 'more powerfully'; see 152 n.

246. monstro] used with reference to its derivation, monstrum or monestrum being = quod monet, though here the 'warning' is intended to deceive.

247. fulvus Iovis ales] αἰετὸς αἰθων, Hom. Il. 15. 690, where Hector attacking the Trojans is compared to an eagle attacking 'a troop of birds as they feed beside a river' (= litoreas aves). Here the eagle = Aeneas, just as the 'noble swan,' 250, is Turnus.

248. sonantem] 'clamorous,' 'screaming,' i.e. when attacked.

249. subito ..] 'when suddenly swooping down upon the water he shamelessly seizes a noble swan in his crooked claws.'

250. inprobus: a favourite adj. with Virgil, marking the absence of all moderation or modesty; cf. its use 2. 356; 9. 52, of famished wolves which will spare nothing; G. 1. 119, of the goose (improbus anser) which will rob anybody; 4. 412, of love which drives men to anything (improbe Amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis?), and below 685, mons improbus, of a falling crag which works remorseless devastation. The eagle is specially so-called here because it typifies 'the shameless stranger' (improbus advena, 261) who is bringing havoc into Italy.

251. arrexere...] 'Excitement seized the Italians, when lo! the whole troop with a scream reverse their flight....' Notice the change of tense in arrexere and convertunt: first the attention of the beholders is aroused, and then the birds suddenly wheel round. The use of a clause introduced by atque, et, or que (parataxis), instead of a subordinate clause introduced by 'when,' is in such cases very common in poetry, the two events described being simply put vividly side by side.

254. vi] the attack of the birds.

255. pondere] the weight of the swan.

256. proiecit fluvio] = in fluvium, 'let fall into the river.' For this use of the dative, cf. 263, profundo = 'on to' or 'over the deep'; 380, solo = in solum; 417, fusum labris; 513, neci mittit; 681, saltum dedit ... arvis, 'leaped to the ground.'

259. hoc erat...] 'This, even this, is what I have often sought with vows.' When something which has been expected or hoped for happens, Latin idiom says hoc erat (cf. Gk. ἦν ἄρα) where we say 'this is'; cf. 2. 664; 7. 128, haec erat illa fames, 'this is that long foretold hunger'—a phrase used when the Trojans found that the prophecy about 'eating their tables' was happily fulfilled by their eating some cakes which they had used as platters to support their food.

260. accipio] sc. omen = the common Gk. phrase εἰδεξάμην τὸν οἰωνόν. If it is to have validity, a happy omen must be at once 'accepted' or 'welcomed,' just as the occurrence of anything ill-omened must be at once deprecated and rejected.

267. sonitum... stridula... secat] imitative alliteration reproducing the 'whizz' of the cornel-wood spear.

268. simul hoc, simul...] lit. 'at the same time this (happened), at the same time a huge shout (rose), and all the ranks were disturbed.' The repetition of simul, and the rapidity of style caused by the omission of the verbs, mark that the act of Tolumnius, the shout, and the confusion were almost simultaneous. Render—‘therewith at once a huge shout rose, and ...’

269. cunei] the wedge-shaped sections into which the semi-circle of seats in a theatre is cut by the gangways (see Dict. Ant. s.v. theatrum); here merely the ‘ranks’ of the spectators.

270. hasta ...] The long sentence is this—‘The spear, as nine ... brothers stood opposite ..., of these one (273), ... a youth (275) ... (it) pierces through the ribs (276).’ We must break it up—‘On sped the spear, while, as it befel, there stood opposite the goodly forms of nine brethren, all of whom one Tyrrhene wife had borne to Arcadian Gylippus. One of these in the waist, where ... a youth conspicuous ... it pierces.’

273. horum] picks up fratrum. ad medium, ‘at the waist’; for neuter adj. used as subst., cf. 424 n. teritur ...: ‘where the belly is chafed by the well-stitched belt, and the buckle clasps the joining of its ends.’ Virgil is copying Homer’s δοι ζωστῆρος ὀχῆς | χρυσεῖοι σύνεχον (Il. 4. 132, where see Leaf), and the buckle is described as ‘biting’ the ends of the belt where they join, because the action of a clasp is exactly like that of biting. The balteus here is not a shoulder-belt, as in 942, but clearly passes round the waist tightly, so as to be rubbed (cf. teritur) by the belly. Sidgwick, with Conington, gives ‘grips closely the edges of the ribs,’ i.e. the lower edges, just where the belt would buckle; but this explanation seems totally to neglect the Latin.

275. iuvenem ... transadigit costas] The well-known Homeric construction (σχήμα καθ’ ὅλον καὶ μέρος) in which an acc. of the person is followed by an acc. in apposition, describing the place in which he is hit, shot, etc. Cf. 10. 698, Lataque saxo ... occupat os; Il. 7. 14, Ἰφίνοον βάλε δουρὶ ... ὤμων (‘in the shoulder’).

277. fratres ... pars ... pars ...] The nominative is broken up into its component parts—‘But the brothers .. some ... some’; cf. line 161 and Eccl. 1. 65, at nos hinc alii ... ibimus, pars veniemus (= ἡμεῖς ... οἱ μὲν ... οἱ δέ ...).

281. Agyllini] i.e. the men of Agylla, afterwards Caere, who formed part of the rebellious Etrurians; see 232 n.

pictis: 'emblazoned'; for blazonry, especially on shields, see the 'Seven against Thebes.'

282. amor ... decernere] 'passion to fight it out with the sword.' The inf. follows the sense of 'eager desire' contained in amor; cf. 290, avidus conjungere, 'eagerly longing to confound.' So 2. 10, amor cognoscere; 298, amor compellare; 2. 575, ira ulcisci; 6. 133, cupido innare; 655, cura pascere.

283-286. These fine lines paint a fresh scene which vividly shows that all hopes of peace are over. While overhead the 'whirling tempest' and 'iron hail' of missiles fill the air, in the centre of the plain we see the altars hastily broken down (diripuer, instantaneous perf.) and the scared priests snatching at the sacred vessels to save them, while Latinus himself secures the images of the gods and flies. The picture is absolutely clear, and the action described in striking contrast with that of the fighting men.

Unfortunately, in 298, Virgil describes Corynaeus as using a lighted brand as a missile, and therefore all editors here explain diripuer aras of despoiling the altars so as to get lighted brands to fight with. But it is clear that the action of Corynaeus is exceptional, and due to the accident of his finding himself beside the partially wrecked altar and able to seize a 'half-burnt brand.' The idea of men arming themselves deliberately with fire-brands from an altar is absurd.

285. focos] 'braziers'; cf. 118.

289. regem ...] 'a prince wearing his princely badge.' Virgil seems to think of him as an Etruscan Lar or Lucumo.

291. adverso ...] 'scares to flight charging with his steed.' The alternative reading averso would mean 'so that he (Aulestes) wheels his steed in flight.'

292. et miser ...] 'and, poor wretch, is hurled amid the altars, that bar his flight behind, on to his head and on to his shoulders.' Conington says, 'he runs backwards upon the altar,' but that he should be merely 'backing away' is inconsistent with proterret and ruit, nor could he, if backing, be pitched violently 'on to his head.' a tergo does not imply that the altars are at his back, but that they were behind him when he turned in flight, and so in his backward flight bring him violently to the ground. in caput inque umeros: the repetition of the pronoun in addition to the conjunction marks great violence; cf. 11. 696, tum validam perque arma viro perque ossa securim ... congeminat.

294. telo trabali] Cf. 1 Sam. 17. 7, of Goliath, 'and the staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam.'

296. hoc habet] This, or habet, is the regular phrase used when a gladiator receives a fatal blow. haec ...: 'this is a nobler victim offered to the mighty gods,' i.e. nobler than they would have received if the intended sacrifice had been completed.

298-305. The account of another struggle between a pair of warriors. Render: 'Barring the path Corynaeus snatches a half-burnt brand from the altar, and as Ebysus advances... first fills his face with flame; out blazed his mighty beard ...' Or we might entirely alter the order and give—'Next as Ebysus advanced... Corynaeus meeting him snatches, etc.' occupare is common in the sense of attacking first, i.e. before the opponent can do anything; cf. 10. 699, saxo occupat os, and elsewhere ense, gladio, morsu occupare aliquem.

301. super ipse ...] 'then himself following up the attack he grasps the dazed foeman's hair, and ... pins his whole body to the ground.' The use of ipse here is noticeable: in 301 it contrasts the personal onslaught of Corynaeus with the torch which he had flung, and in 303 ipsum contrasts the whole figure of Aulestes with the caesaries by which he was at first gripped. So 369 ipsum contrasts Turnus with his plume.

304. sic] 'so,' i.e. as he holds him pinned to the ground.

306. ille] i.e. Alsus, who turns on his pursuer, and 'drawing back his axe (to strike) cleaves his enemy's forehead in twain to the chin.' In 309 olli again indicates a change in the person referred to, being = Podalirius; cf. carefully its similar use in 291 and 300. In passages where the person spoken of is continually varying the change must be made perfectly clear by guiding pronouns.

309. dura quies, ferreus somnus] Good instances of oxy-moron, the one requirement of 'repose' being that it should be easy, and of 'sleep' that it should be soft (cf. its regular epithets mollis, μαλακός). For ferreus somnus cf. Hom. Il. 11. 741, κοιμήσατο χάλκεον ὕπνον.

310. in aeternam ...] a beautiful phrase, and conduntur is happier than the clauduntur of 10. 746, where these lines also occur. Conington gives 'are curtained in everlasting night.'

311-340. Aeneas, as he seeks to stay the strife, is wounded by a chance arrow and retires. Turnus, marking this, exultingly mounts his car and spreads destruction among the foe, fierce and terrible as the War-god himself.

311. pius Aeneas] pius is the standing epithet of Aeneas as expressing (1) his filial 'piety' or dutifulness towards his father Anchises, and (2) his 'piety' or dutiful obedience to the will of the gods. Here, in connection with inermem and nudato (= 'unhelmeted') capite, it seems emphatic as marking his desire dutifully or righteously to fulfil the solemn compact which had been made.

314. ictum] 'ratified,' the word acquiring this meaning because a covenant was ratified by 'striking' (i.e. slaying) a victim.

316. me sinite ...] 'To me leave all, and banish fear.' Aeneas does not know the cause of the sudden alarm, and imagines that it is due to the fears of his followers on his behalf. faxo: an archaic future (= Greek future in -σω), cf. iusso; Roby S. G. 291. Note the alliteration of foedera faxo firma marking vehemence.

317. Turnum ...] 'Now these holy rites make Turnus mine.' iam is emphatic and repeats the iam in line 314—now the treaty is completed; now no one else can claim the right to fight with Turnus.

319. viro] 'against the hero.' stridens alis: 'with whistling flight.'

320. incertum, qua ...] 'none knows by what hand launched, whence quivering sped,' lit. 'driven by what launching,' turbo being used of flinging any missile which has a spin or whirl as it flies, e.g. turbo ballistae, hastae, saxi.

322. pressa est] 'is hidden.'

526. superbus] 'proudly,' in strong contrast with pius 311, and his own dejected appearance, 219-221.

327. emicat] A vivid word: in his glistening armour and 'glowing eagerness' (cf. fervidus ardet) 'he proudly leaps into his car like a flash of light.' Cf. 6. 5, iuvenum manus emicat ardens, of the Trojans landing in Italy all aglow with hope.

330. aut raptas ...] 'or flings the swiftly-snatched spear against those who fly'; those who stand their ground he cuts down or tramples beneath his chariot; at those who turn in flight he hurls spears. Commentators ask where he snatches the spears from, but the point is not before the mind of the poet, and raptas only suggests, as Sidgwick remarks, "the speed and rapidity of the action, rapere being frequently used with a vigorous force of 'taking up' weapons"; cf. 8, 111, 220; 9. 763; 11. 651.

331. qualis ...] 'And like as when in swift career ... blood-stained Mavors clashes on his shield, and, arousing war, gives the rein to his raging steeds ... even with such eagerness (italis ... 337).' Cf. Il. 13. 298:

οἷος δὲ βροτολοιγὸς Ἄρης πολεμόνδε μέτεισιν, τῷ δὲ Φόβος, φίλος υἱός, ἅμα κρατερὸς καὶ ἀταρβής ἔσπετο ...

332. clipeo increpat] i.e. strikes his shield to inspire terror, a custom which is still common among savages. Cf. 700, and Callimachus, Hymn to Delos, 136, ὕψόθε δ' ἐσμαράγησε καὶ ἀσπίδα τύψεν ἀκωκῇ.

334. gemit ultima] 'groans to its furthest bounds.'

335. Formidinis] 'Terror and Wrath and Treachery' are the personified powers of battle (hence Irae in plur. = 'spirits of Wrath') who follow in the train of the War-god, just as in Homer Il. 4. 440, his attendants are Δεῖμος τ' ἡδὲ Φόβος καὶ Ἔρις ἄμοτον μεμανῖα.

338. miserabile] Nent. adj. used as adverb (cf. 398 n), and better taken with insultans than with caesis, 'piteously trampling on the slaughtered foe.'

340. mixtaque ...] lit. 'and blood is trampled on, sand being mingled with it': we should say, 'and the sand is trampled into a gore-soaked mass.'

340-382. Turnus slays other Trojans, especially Eumedes, who, like his sire Dolon, sought glory only to find a grave. Then as he sweeps along, furious as the blast of Borras, the hero Phegeus seizes on his horses' reins and strives to check them, but is trampled under foot and slain.

342. hunc ...] 'this one and that in close encounter, the former (i.e. Sthenelus) from afar; from afar too (he slew) the sons whom Imbrasmus' congressus is exactly = the adverb comminus. The two forms of combat were either 'hand to hand' (comminus; cf. 890) or eminus, 'from a distance,' i.e. by the use of missiles.

344. nutrierat ...] He had 'bred them in Lycia, and decked them with like arms, either to fight in close combat or to outstrip the winds on horseback (i.e. or to charge on horseback).' The infinitives conferre and prævertere are dependent on nutrierat, which contains the thought 'had trained them,' 'had taught them to,' and the intervening words, paribusque ornauerat armis, do not affect the construction at all, but call attention, in a touching parenthesis, to the way in which the fond father had decked the two youths 'in like armour' only to fall by a like death. So 6. 826, paribus armis = 'like arms.'

Conington, almost following Servius, makes the infinitives dependent on paribus, 'arms equally fitted either to join hand-to-hand combat or to outstrip the winds,' and quotes the very ambiguous passage, Ecl. 7. 5, for the construction. But what sort of arms would these be, and what arms could be paria ... equo prævertere ventos?

347. antiqui] probably = 'of ancient lineage,' cf. 529. The story of Dolon is told in Hom. Il. 10. 299 seq., where he offers to go and spy out (cf. 349) the Greek camp, if Hector will promise him the horses of Achilles as his reward, but is detected and slain by Diomedes (= Tydidēs, 351).

348. nomine ...] 'in name recalling his grandsire, in spirit and prowess (lit. 'the deeds of his hands') his parent.' In historical Greece the naming of a person after his grandfather was very frequent (cf. Arist. Av. 274, Ἰππὸνικὸς Καλλίου καὶ Ἰππονίκου Καλλίας).

350. ausus ...] 'had dared to claim as his reward the steeds of Achilles;' cf. for currus, used of horses, G. 1. 91, Martis equi biuges et magni currus Achillis; 4. 389. Xanthus and Balius, the horses of Achilles, were divine, cf. Hom. Il. 16. 148.

351. alio ...] 'repaid with a far different reward (i.e. death) for such daring, and he has no ambition (i.e. now that he is dead) for the horses of A.' ausis must refer back to ausus and therefore describe, not so much the daring of his exploit as his 'daring' (i.e. effrontery) in claiming the reward he had done, and nec equis adspirat A. also marks his ambition as exaggerated; Virgil, like Homer, here clearly disparaging Dolon as too arrogant, although in 347, 348 he rather speaks of him as a famous warrior. adficere aliquem poena, laude, honoribus, and the like are common = 'bestow punishment, praise, dignities on any one.'

353. hunc] i.e. Eumedes, the word resuming the narrative after the digression about his father.

354. ante ...] 'first aiming at him with light javelin through the long space between, then checks his steeds ...' inane is used as a subst. (cf. 424 n.) = 'space,' 'empty space,' being a recollection of Lucretius, with whom it is a technical word = 'void,' τὸ κενόν. Cf. 906, vacuum per inane. The javelin hits Eumedes, cf. 356, but secutus cannot be taken = 'reached, i.e. wounded' as some give.

356. semianimi] semi- (= ἡμι-) has e long, and the i is either pronounced as y or vanishes altogether, the word being often written semanimis; cf. semiermis or semermis, semiesus or semesus.

357. dextrae ...] 'wrests the sword from his (i.e. Eumedes') hand.'

359. en ...] 'Lo! Trojan, lie there and measure out the fields and that Western land thou didst seek in war.' Servius well notes that metire is used technically, metiuntur enim agros qui colonis assignant, and the Agrimensores (see Dict. of Ant.) were a regular guild at Rome. Eumedes had come to win a new land, and he was to have 'two paces' of it for his own. Cf. Soph. O. C. 790, χθονὸς λαχεῖν τοσοῦτον, ἐνθ' ἀνείν μόνον.

362. huic ...] 'with him he sends Asbutes as his comrade,' i.e. to the lower world.

363. Chloreaquē Sybarimque] See 89 n.

364. sternacis] 'restive.' The word, which occurs here for the first time, is formed like fugax = qui fugit, edax = qui edit, being = qui sternit (equitem). It is curious that we have no English equivalent for such an expressive and useful adjective.

365-370. Notice the order in this simile. We have (1) the pursuing blast and (2) the flying winds, but then, in inverted order (2) the flying hosts and (1) the pursuing Turnus. The simile is Homeric, cf. Il. 4. 419; 11. 305; 15. 624.

366. insonat Aegaeo] 'falls with a roar on the Aegaeon.' sequiturque ... : It is impossible to say whether fluctus is acc. plur. ('the storm chases the billows') or nom. sing. ('and then the billow rushes shorewards').

369. fert ...] 'his rush sweeps him (see 301 n.) along, while the breeze, as his chariot meets it, tosses his flying plume.' The picture of the plumes tossing in the wind caused by the rush of the chariot is intended to bring out the idea of great speed.

371. non tulit ...] 'Phegeus could not brook his onset and angry rage; (therefore) upon the chariot he flung himself and wrenched aside ...' Cf. 10. 578, haud tulit Aeneas tanto furore furentes, | inruit, where, as here, haud tulit marks that Aeneas finds the ferocity of the foe 'unbearable' and so is spurred on to attack him; but here non tulit instantem is harsh, because it naturally suggests the meaning, 'did not endure his onset,' i.e. fled from it. In both passages the asyndeton between non tulit and the following verb suggests rapidity.

374. dum trahitur ...] 'as he is dragged hanging to the yoke, the broad lance-head (i.e. of Turnus) pierces him exposed,' i.e. while unable to use his shield; cf. 377.

376. summum ...] 'and with its wound just grazes the surface of his body:' for the metaphor in degustat, 'tastes,' cf. 11. 804, hasta ... alte bibit acta cruorem, where we can render literally 'drinks blood.'

377. tamen] i.e. in spite of his wound and dangerous position 'he still, covering himself with his shield, turned and was making for his foe... when the wheel dashed him headlong...'

379. praecipitem ... procursu] alliteration to give the sense of rapid rush. The same idea is brought out by the repetition in rota and concitus axis ('wheel and whirling axle').

380. secutus] 'pressing on'; lit. 'following up' the work of destruction.

382. harenae] If right must be the locative case = 'on the sand'; but some MSS. have harena. It cannot be explained as = in harenam (cf. solo, 380 and 256 n.) because that dative is only used after verbs implying movement.

383-440. Meantime Aeneas, angrily chafing at his helplessness, is led limping from the field, and the leech Iapis vainly endeavours to remove the arrow, while the foe press eagerly on. Then Venus, concealed in a cloud, brings a healing herb from Crete and dips it in the water with which the wound was bathed. At once the arrow yielded, and Aeneas with all his old vigour dons his armour and then bids Ascanius farewell.

383. dat funera] 'spreads havoc'; lit. 'causes deaths.' The use of dare in Virgil deserves study; cf. 81, dicta dedit, 'uttered words'; 227, dat sese, 'flings himself'; 367, fugam dant, 'fly'; 437, te ... dabit defensum, 'shall afford thee protection'; 441, dicta dedit; 453, dabit ruinas, 'spread ruin'; 463, dant terga, 'fly'; 575, dant cuneum, 'form a wedge'; 655, exscidio dare, 'give to destruction'; 681, saltum dedit, 'leaped.'

386. alternos] Clearly one leg is helpless, and so he has to 'support every alternate step upon his spear.'

387. telum] 'the arrow-head' which is left in the flesh, 'the shaft (harundine) having broken off.' For luctatur eripere, cf. 586 n.

388. auxilioque ...] 'and demands the shortest road for relief, bidding them with a broad sword cut the wound and open ...' secens is subj. of oblique command following poscit.

391. Iapis Iasides] Virgil clearly chooses these names to suggest ἰάσμαι. Cf. the famous ἰάταί σε Ἰησοῦς, Acts ix. 34.

393. suas artes, sua munera] i.e. the power of divination and of playing on the lyre mentioned in the next line. These Apollo 'offered' (dabat) to Iapis, but he (ille, 395) preferred to receive the gift of healing. For the various attributes of the god, see Lidd. and Scott, s.v. Ἀπόλλων.

395. ille] Notice the position of the pronoun, marking clearly the change of subject and also some antithesis: we should say 'but he.' Cf. 400; 450. depositi: 'dying.'

It seems to have been customary to 'lay' sick folk, who were despaired of, outside the door, vel ut extremum spiritum redderent terrae, vel ut possent forte a transeuntibus curari (Servius). proferret: 'put off.'

397. mutas artes] because (1) medicine, unlike the arts of divination and music, is a silent art, and (2), in connection with inglorius, because it is not an art that wakes the poet's song or leads to fame.

398. acerba fremens] 'angrily chafing,' i.e. at his enforced inaction. As you can say acerbum fremitum fremere, so you can say shortly acerbum or acerba fremere, and the acc. neuter of the adjective in such cases is used almost like an adverb; cf. 338; 402, multa trepidat, 'much he bustles'; 496, multa Iovem testatus; 506, multa morantem; 535. inmane frementi; 700, horrendumque intonat, 'thunders horribly'; 864, serum canit. So in Greek ἡδὺ γελᾶν, 'laugh sweetly,' etc. ingentem...: cf. 2 Sam. i. 6, 'Behold, Saul leaned upon his spear.'

400. lacrimis immobilis] 'unmoved by their tears'; he stands grim and angry amid the weeping throng.

401. Paeonium] = the Greek παιώνιος, from Παιών or Παιάν, a common attribute of Apollo as 'the Healer'; cf. 7. 769, Paeoniis revocatum herbis. As regards the quantity possibly Virgil may treat the word as almost trisyllabic, making i consonantal. lapis is, of course, 'girt up after the fashion of Paeon' in order that his robe may not get in his way.

404. sollicitat] 'worries at,' 'works to and fro.'

405. viam] 'his course,' i.e. the method he is adopting. auctor: 'his master.'

406. et campis...] 'and (meantime) along the plain still more and more the panic spreads.' Notice the intentionally harsh ending of the line.

407. iam pulvere...] 'already they mark the sky columned with dust,' caused by the approaching cavalry. The sky seems stiff or solid with dust, which rises like a wall or in columns.

411. hic] 'here,' i.e. at this juncture; we say 'then.' indigno: unworthy of him, and so = 'undeserved.' concussa: here of mental disturbance, 'sore troubled'; cf. 478.

412. genetrix] added to emphasize the idea already expressed in nati, and so=‘with a mother’s care or ‘eagerness’; cf. 871. The account of goats eating dictamnium (τὸ δίκταμνον) to get rid of an arrow is from Arist. Hist. An. 6. 9. 1, and Theophrast. Hist. Pl. 9. 16. 1. puberibus: ‘downy.’

416. faciem circumdata] ‘veiling her face’; cf. 172 n.

417. hoc fustum ...] ‘with it she impregnates the water that had been poured into (labris=in labra; cf. 256 n.) a gleaming caldron.’ splendentibus may describe either the gleam of the vessel itself or that of the water in it.

419. ambrosiae] Ἀμβροσία in Homer is the food of the immortals (as if from ἀ and βροτός), or an unguent (cf. Semitic anbar, ‘ambergris’) with mysterious restorative properties. Here it is probably=any life-giving plant, like panacea=πανάκεια, ‘the all-healing’ plant. panaceam: Virgil is fond of the quadrisyllabic ending with Greek words, e.g. hyacinthus, cyparissus, hymenaeus, 805.

420. foviti] ‘bathed.’

422. quippe] ‘assuredly,’ ‘verily.’ emphasizing the wonder of the statement; cf. l. 39, quippe vetor fatis; Cic. pro Mil. 12. 33, moveat me quippe lumen curiae. Kennedy gives ‘in consequence,’ and others make it = εἰκότως. dolor omnis 13 n.

424. novae] ‘new-found.’ in pristina: ‘as of old’; lit. ‘to its former state.’ Virgil is fond of using neuter adjectives as nouns, especially in prepositional phrases; cf. 273, ad medium; 354, inane; 906, vacuum per inane; 687, in abruptum; 803, ad supremum, ‘to the final issue.’

427. arte magistra] ‘the guidance of art.’

429. maior ...] ‘a mightier god intervenes.’ He recognizes that a divine power, mightier than human agency, has effected the miracle in order to ‘send back’ Aeneas to a ‘mightier exploit,’ i.e. the destruction of Turnus.

430. auro] i.e. in greaves of gold. Notice the change of tense from incluserat to odit and coruscat; he had already donned his greaves, and, ‘scorning delay, is brandishing his spear’ for battle.

432. habilis lateri] ‘convenient for his side,’ i.e. well poised on his left arm, so as to protect his side. Similarly, too, the lorica or 'corslet' must hang comfortably, so that his back—and by implication his chest—is well defended.

433. armis] certainly = armatis brachiis. He 'flings his mail-clad arms' about his son; cf. next line. That the ambiguous word armis can ever = 'arms' (brachiis), as if from armus, is very doubtful, but some so take it here, and see Con. on 4. 11.

434. summaque ...] 'and just kissing through the helmet the edge of his lips thus speaks.'

435. Virgil is copying the famous address of Ajax to his son (Soph. Aj. 554).

ὦ παῖ, γένοιο πατρὸς εὐτυχέστερος τὰ δ' ἅλλ' ὅμοιος, καὶ γένοι' ἂν οὐ κακός.

437. defensum dabit] Cf. 383 n.; Livy 8. 6, stratas legiones Latinorum dabo.

438. tu facito ...] 'See thou, when presently youth shall have grown to ripeness (matura is proleptic), that thou be mindful, and recalling ... let thy sire Aeneas and thy uncle Hector stir thy spirit.' facito is the strong legal form of the imperative, suited to solemn command.

440. avunculus: used loosely; both Hector and Aeneas were great-grandsons of Ilus, King of Troy.

441-499. Aeneas mores to battle with his host, dark and threatening as a storm-cloud that advances over the sea, bringing ruin to the fields. His companions slay many of the Rutuli, but he, scorning all other combatants, pursues Turnus only, whose chariot Inturna drives hither and thither, in movement as swift and changeful as a swallow's flight, so that Aeneas is altogether baffled. At length, however, a spear hurled by Messapus strikes the plume from his helmet, so that he indignantly joins in the general attack.

443. Antheusquē] Cf. 89 n.

444. fluit] 'pours forth' like a flood. tum ...: 'then the plain is confounded with blinding dust, and the startled earth trembles with the tramp of feet.' For caeca, cf. caeca caligine, 3. 203. Note the alliteration in pulsu, pedum, tremit, tellus.

446. vidit ... videre] emphatic repetition, marking excitement.

447. ima] 'inmost,' emphasizing the depth of the fear which makes 'all their bones to shake' (Job iv. 14).

450. ille ...] 'Onward he (Aeneas) flies, and hurries his darkling host over the open plain.' atrum is used partly = 'dark,' 'black'; cf. Homer's φάλαγγες κνάναι (Il. 4. 281), partly = 'deadly,' just as the nimbus with which it is compared is both dark and deadly.

451. abrupto sidere nimbus] Nimbus here is frequently explained of 'a waterspout' (see Lucr. 6. 423 seq.), but it is better taken simply as a storm-cloud, the gathering of which can, of course, be best observed over the sea; cf. Hom. Il. 4. 275, ὥς δ' ὅτ' ἀπὸ σκοπιῆς εἶδεν νέφος αἰπὸλος ἀνὴρ | ἐρχόμενον κατὰ πόντον The use sidere is peculiar, but the constant association of the rising and setting of the constellations with changes of weather, and especially with tempests, seems to create a use of sidus = 'weather,' and then 'bad weather' (cf. 11. 260, triste Minerva sidus), so that abrupto sidere = 'with bursting tempest.'

454. satis] dat. plur. of sata; see Vocab.

455. 'Before it fly the winds and bear their utterance to the shore.' The winds act as heralds of the deluge and proclaim its advent.

457. densi ...] 'thickly they mass themselves man after man (lit. 'each man') in close-packed columns.' quisque is inserted between the plural adj. densi and the plural verb adglomerant to mark the individual eagerness with which the common action is carried out. cuneus is a regular military term for any wedge-shaped body of troops.

461. primus ...] Cf. 258 seq.

462. clamor] 'a shout' of terror at the fall of Tolumnius. vicissim: because up to now the Rutuli had been attacking; cf. 407, where they charge in a cloud of dust, whereas now, 'wheeling round in turn they fly (383n.) in a whirl of dust over the plain.'

464. ipse] 'their leader.' neque aversos ...: he 'scorns to lay low in death' both (1) those who seek to escape, and (2) those who either 'meet him fairly foot to foot' or 'hurl missiles' from a distance. In 465 the two ordinary methods of attack (comminus and minus pugnare) are mentioned, and congressos has the purely present force which deponent participles often have (cf. 606 n.), and is exactly parallel to ferentes. Conington wrongly explains "those who have already met him (congressos)" and "those who are going to attack him (tela ferentes)."

sternere morti : may be = sternere in mortem ; cf. 258 n. and 513, neci mittit, but perhaps morti is an old abl. like sorti.

466. caligine] caused by the dust (444, calco pulvere) and arrows (cf. 578).

468. virago] 'martial maid.' The derivation of virgo is uncertain, but virago is clearly formed in imitation of it from vir, to denote a maid with the spirit of a man ; cf. the quotation in Cic. de Off. 1. 18. 61, ros autem, iuvenes, animum geritis muliebrem, [illa virago viri.

469. media inter lora] sc. ōvra ' (as he stood) amid the reins.' Metiscus probably has the reins round his body, and is pushed forward, so that he also falls 'between the reins' and on to the 'pole' (cf. temone), from which he then tumbles. The want of a present part. of the verb 'to be' makes expressions like this somewhat obscure in Latin, and some would explain 'amid his driving,' 'while he was driving,' but this is (1) not supported by the analogy of media inter proelia, 11. 541, or media inter carmina, Hor. Ep. 2. 1. 185, and (2) adds nothing to the picture.

471. subit] 'takes his place.'

473. aedes] Probably Virgil is thinking of a country-house. In that case porticibus (476) would refer to outside colonnades or the like round a courtyard, and stagna to tanks or ponds for either use or ornament. Some, however, take porticibus of the columns or Peristyle inside the atrium round the impluvium ; see plans of Greek and Roman houses in Smith's Dict. of Ant.

475. nidis loquacibus] 'for its noisy nestlings' ; for this use of nidus, cf. G. 4. 17, nidis inmitibus.

477. sonat] 'twitters.'

478. obit omnia] 'traverses all the field.'

481. haud minus ...] 'not less eagerly does Aeneas trace many a winding circuit to meet him.' lego (1) = 'pick,' 'gather,' is then (2) = 'lightly touch,' or pass over the surface of anything, and so (3) = 'gather' the meaning of writing, 'read,' cf. our 'skim.' Here it bears the second sense = 'lightly trace': the phrase tortos legit orbes might be used of a figure-skater who cuts intricate circles as he glides over the ice.

483. voce vocat] a favourite assonance = 'call aloud on; cf. 638; 6. 247, 506.

484. fugam cursu] Aeneas is on foot while Turnus is in a chariot, and so he has 'by running to try (i.e. seek to match) the flight of winged steeds.'

486. heu, quid agat?] Aeneas would say to himself, quid agam? The poet repeats his words in oratio obliqua, 'alas (he says), what is he to do?' vario ...: 'vainly he is tossed on a shifting tide,' i.e. he is at a loss what course to take. Cf. our 'wavers,' although both fluctuat and aestu also suggest the boiling and seething of passion; cf. 527; 4. 532, irarum fluctuat aestu.

488. huic ...] 'against him (ethic dat.) Messapus, as, lightly running, he happened to carry in his left hand two tough iron-tipped spears, whirling one of them ...'

491. se collegit in arma] 'gathered himself within his shield, sinking on his knee' so as to avoid the spear.

492. apicem] a sort of raised peak which held the cristae.

494. insidiisque subactus] 'forced by treachery.' Hitherto, holding the 'treaty' (cf. 496 and 13) still binding, he had refused all battle with any combatants except Turnus, and therefore to attack him was treacherous.

495. equos] i.e. the horses of Turnus, which he sees are constantly 'driven away' from him.

496. multa ...] 'oft (cf. 398 n.) calling Jove and the altars of the outraged covenant (see 171 seq.) to witness,' i.e. to witness the fact that he only joins in the combat when compelled.

499. irarumque ...] 'flings the reins fully to his rage'; Ennius (Ann. 464) has the exaggerated phrase irarum effunde quadrigas. Cf. our 'to bridle anger.'

500-553. Who could tell of all the slaughter wrought by Turnus and Aeneas? Hero after hero they slew, spreading havoc with all the rage of fire or flood. Aeneas hurls Murranus from his chariot; Turnus kills Hyllus and Cretheus. Cupencus falls, and Aeolus, whom the Greeks could not overcome, finds a grave far from his home in Laurentine soil. The fight grows stubborn between both hosts.

500. quis mihi nunc ..] 'and now, alas, what god could unfold so many horrors, who (relate) in song ...?' This passage is sometimes misunderstood. Conington, for instance, in his translation gives, 'what god will tell me all those horrors and relate for me in verse ...?'; but, apart from the rendering of expediat, 'will tell,' who ever heard of a god relating anything to or for a poet in verse? In reality (1) mihi has nothing to do with the distant expediat, but is an ethic dative indicating that the question he asks affects the poet deeply and perplexes him, and (2) deus is not supplied with the second quis. Overpowered by the thought of the tale of butchery which he has before him, Virgil asks, 'What deity could unfold it, who relate it in verse?' indicating that its horror is beyond what divine power or human art can describe.

503. tanton' ...] 'was it thy pleasure, O Jupiter, that peoples soon to live in everlasting peace should clash with such a shock?' For tanton = tantone, cf. 797, 874.

505. 'Aeneas (meeting) the Rutulian Suero—that combat first checked the Trojan onset—with brief delay smites him in the side.' Hitherto the Trojan onset had been unresisted, but, when Suero meets Aeneas, it is checked, although Suero cannot 'long delay' his assailant, who is 'ready for him' (excipit) and deals him a blow 'in the side.' excipere is regularly used of hunters who are ready to receive game or beasts which are driven to them, and so here excipit describes Aeneas as 'ready to receive' Suero's approach. excipit in latus is a sort of pregnant construction = 'he receives (striking him) in the side.'

507. qua fata celerrima] Cf. Il. 8. 84, ὅθι ... μάλιστα καίριον ἐστί, 'at the place where death is speediest.' crudum: probably almost = crudelem, 'the un pitying sword'; cf. Homer's νηλεὲς χαλκῶ.

508. transadigit takes a double acc. like transportare; 'he drives (adigit) the sword through (trans) the ribs that fence his chest.' costas et crates pectoris is a sort of hendiadys; cf. S69 n.

509. The sentence is rather condensed and needs care in rendering—'Turnus hurling from their steeds A. and his brother D., then attacking them on foot (i.e. dismounting himself) strikes the one as he advances with his long spear, the other with his sword.' Cf. Hom. Il. 20. 462, τὸν μὲν δούρῳ βαλὼν, τὸν δὲ σχεδὸν ἄορι τύψας.

513. neci] with mittit = in necem, 'hurls to destruction,' cf. 256 n.

514. maestum] Clearly it is the sight of Aeneas slaying three heroes 'in one assault' which makes Onites 'mournful.'

515. nomen Echionium] 'an ancient Theban name'; nomen is in apposition to Oniten, the name and the man who bears it being regarded as one. Echion assisted Cadmus in building Thebes, and so any one whose name showed that he was connected with him must be regarded as of the best blood. Peridia too, though unknown, was clearly 'very noble' (περί and δῖα).

516. Lycia ...] 'from Lycia and the fields of Apollo,' i.e. from Lycia, over which Apollo presides, he having a famous temple at Patara in that district. Others press the meaning of Apollinis agris as being the sacred land actually belonging to the temple.

518. piscosae] The adj. is added to make clear what his 'craft (ars) had been.'

519. nec nota potentum munera] 'nor knew he aught of great men's patronage.' He had led the humble, quiet life of a fisherman, and never sought to become the retainer of some great and warlike chief. There is another reading, limina (cf. Hor. Epod. 2. 8, superba civium | potentiorum limina) = 'thresholds' or 'ante-chambers,' where clients or retainers waited, which gives much the same sense. Conington explains munera p., 'duties or burdens of the great,' and Servius as referring to the 'services' (officia) or 'duties' which the poor owe to the great.

520. conducta] emphasizing the humble position of his father, whose farm was only 'hired.' To the Romans owner- ship seemed essential to the self-respect even of the humblest farmer, and the condition of tenancy was neither common nor esteemed (see Hor. Sat. 2. 2).

521. inmissi ...] The reference is to the practice of deliberately 'firing' a wooded tract 'from different sides,' partly to get rid of the wood, partly to enrich the pasturage; cf. 10. 405; Lucr. 5. 1247; Sil. It. 7. 365, cum Calabros urunt ad pinguis pabula saltus.

522. virgulta sonantia lauro] 'the bushes crackle with bay,' when the bay trees, of which they are composed, burn with that peculiar crackling which distinguishes them; cf. Lucr. 6. 153, Delphica laurus | terribili sonitu flamma crepitante crematur.

523. From Hom. Il. 4. 452, ὡς δ' ὅτε χεῖμαρροι ποταμοὶ κατ' ὄρεσφι ῥέοντες and Il. 16. 390, χαράδραι, | ἐς δ' ἄλλα πορφυρέην μεγάλη στενάχουσι ῥέουσai | ἐξ ὀρέων ἐπὶ κάρ, μινύθει δέ τε ἔργ' ἀνθρώπων, the latter passage seeming to show that in aequora is 'to the sea' (= ἐς ἄλλα) rather than 'over the plain.' The devastation which the torrent creates is by its fury along its banks (and so exactly similar to that wrought by the raging heroes) rather than by inundation.

527. rumpuntur ...] 'their unconquerable hearts are bursting,' i.e. with the 'rage' which 'boils within' them. vinci is the epexegetic inf., so-called because it 'fully explains' (ἐπεξηγείται) in what particular sense the general adjective 'ignorant' is used; cf. G. 2. 467, nescia fallere; 4. 470, nescia mansuescere; Hor. Od. 1. 6. 6, cedere nescii.

528. itur] 'they advance': lit. 'it is gone (by them),' intransitive verbs being often used in the passive impersonally; 6. 179, itur in antiquam silvam; below 739 and G. 3. 98, ventum est; 249, male erratur, 'it is ill wandering'; 4. 78, 189, 374.

529. hic] Aeneas) (ille 535 = Turnus. sonantem: 'loudly boasting,' 'vaunting.'

530. genus actum] 'his lineage stretching,' Conington.

531. 'headlong with a stone and mighty whirling rock he dashes down (i.e. from his car) and flings upon the ground.'

532. hunc lora ...] 'Notice the expressive tangled rhythm,' Sidgwick.

534. incita nec ... memorum] Nec is = et non, the 'hoof' being described as (1) galloping furiously, and (2) belonging to steeds that remember not their master. In translating we should omit the connecting 'and'—'furiously the hoof of his steeds that forget their master tramples him ...'

535. Hyllō ānimisque] Hiatus after long o when the ictus rests upon it occurs many times in Virgil; cf. 31; 7. 178, cedro Italusque; 226, Oceanō ēt. For inmane frementi, 'raging horribly,' cf. 398 n.

539. nec di ...] 'nor did the gods he served protect Cupencus.' Servius states that in the Sabine language Cupencus signifies a priest; hence sui. He also notes the art with which Virgil marks the superiority of Aeneas; valour cannot save Cretheus from Turnus, but even the special protection of heaven cannot protect Cupencus 'when Aeneas attacks.'

541. mora] 'check' or 'delay of his shield,' i.e. the shield with which he sought to delay death. aerei: two syllables by synizesis (συνίησις, 'a sinking together'), and so commonly with the oblique cases of words in -eus, cf. βαῖτεῖ, 10. 496; aureā, 1. 698; ferrēi, 6. 280.

543. et late ...] 'and cover the earth with thy broad bulk.'

546. 'Here didst thou find the goal of death: thy stately dwelling was beneath Ida, at Lyrnesus thy stately dwelling, in Laurentine earth thy tomb.' mortis metae = Homer's θανάτοιο τέλος, and commentators also quote Il. 20. 390, ἐνθάδε τοι θάνατος 'γενεή δέ τοι ἐστ' ἐπὶ λίμνῃ | Γυγαίῃ' for 547, while they refer to Il. 20. 371, for the device of repeating domus alta; but the peculiar charm of these pathetic lines is wholly Virgil's. Lyrnesi: locative, the only instance of this use with the name of a town in Virgil.

548. totae adeo ...] 'Then the universal host met, both all the Latins and all the Trojans.' adeo is frequently used in Virgil as second word in a sentence to strongly emphasize the first word; cf. Ecl. 4. 11, teque adeo; 9. 59, hunc adeo, 'just from here'; G. 1. 94, multum adeo; 2. 323, rer adeo, 'spring, yes spring'; Aen. 3. 203, tres adeo ... soles, 'three whole days'; 4. 533, sic adeo; 6. 498, vix adeo. omnesque ... omnes, 'both all ... and all.' Virgil is fond of thus omitting a second et or que where he repeats an important word; cf. Ecl. 4. 6, redit et

Virgo, redeunt Saturnia regna; Aen. 11. 171, Tyrrhenique duces Tyrrhenum exercitus omnis; 641, ingentemque animis, ingentem corpore.

552. 'Each doing his best the heroes struggle with utmost force of strength.' To render pro se quisque, 'each for himself,' gives a different meaning in English. The second half of the line is from Ennius; the monosyllabic ending gives a sense of roughness and violence.

554-592. Venus suggests to Aeneas that he should attack the city itself. He accordingly addresses his host, telling them that, weary of seeking Turnus, he is resolved to destroy it with fire. The assault begins, Aeneas leading on his men, while the citizens are confused,—some eager for surrender, others for resistance,—like bees when their dwelling in a rock is smoked.

554. mentem] explained by the clause iret ut ... 'purpose to advance ...'

557. diversa per agmina] 'throughout the host on every side.'

560. imago] 'representation,' 'mental image'; we should say 'thought' or 'idea'; cf. 665.

562. tumulum] Virgil seems to be thinking of the tribunal, from which it was customary for an imperator to address his troops.

564. medius] 'in their midst'; Sidgwick strangely explains it as 'a variation for medio,' as though it meant 'in the midst of the mound.'

565. ne qua ...] 'let no delay attend my words,' i.e. let what I say be performed at once. Iuppiter hac stat: 'heaven is on our side.' Iuppiter is probably = Ζεύς "Ὀρκίος who fights against those who have broken a solemn compact.

566. subitum] emphatic: the sudden character of the design is not to check them.

567. causam belli] The city, with rhetorical exaggeration, is called 'cause of the war,' because it is, as described in 572, the 'centre' and 'main issue' of the war.

570. 'Am I of a surety to wait until it be Turnus' pleasure to abide battle with me, and he be willing again to fight after defeat'? scilicet, pati, and victus, are all used scornfully; victus refers to the fact that Turnus has been running away from him.

572. caput] i.e. the controlling central power; cf. Livy 26. 7, caput ipsum belli Romam petere, of Hannibal's design to attack Rome. belli summa: the phrases summa belli, imperii, consilii, rerum, etc., are common to denote the main or most important part of 'a campaign,' 'a plan,' etc., as opposed to minor details.

574. dixerat, atque ... dant] 'no sooner had he spoken than they form.' The change of tense from pluperfect to present (cf. 650) and the use of atque, which denotes close connection, mark that their action follows immediately on the end of his speech.

578. ferrum torquent] 'hurl iron javelins.' obumbrant: cf. the famous answer of Dieneces at Thermopylae, who, when he was told that the Persian arrows would hide the sun, replied that it was 'good to fight in the shade,' Herod. 7. 226.

579. dextram ... tendit] graphic; as he leads his men on he waves the sword in his right hand towards the walls.

582. bis ... altera foedera] The making of the first treaty is described in Book 7; it has been broken owing to the devices of Juno, who (7. 324) sent the fury Allecto to cause dissension between the Trojans and the Latins.

583. discordia] explained in the next three lines: some wish to yield, others to fight.

585. ipsumque ...] They 'seek to drag him to the walls' in order that he may there make terms with Aeneas. Notice that trahunt does not imply that they succeeded in dragging Latinus to the walls; it merely describes an attempt (or only a desire) to seize him and do so.

586. pergunt defendere] 'press on to defend.' For the infinitive cf. 60, desiste committere, 'cease joining'; 357, luctatur eripere; 676, absiste morari. It is very common in poetry after many verbs implying 'ability,' 'desire,' 'determination,' 'neglect,' etc., and is called epexegetic (cf. 527 n.), because it 'fully explains,' or prolative, because it 'extends,' the meaning of the verb.

587. From Apollonius Rhodius, 2. 130:

ὥς δὲ μελίσσῶν σμήνος μέγα μηλοβοτῆρες ἢ μελισσοκόμοι πέτρῃ ἐνὶ καπνιώσιν, αἱ δὴ τοι τεῖως μὲν ἀολλέες ᾧ ἐνὶ σίμβλῳ βομβηδὸν κλονέονται, ἐπιπρὸ δὲ λιγνύοντι καπνῷ τυφόμεναι πέτρης ἐκὰς αἰσσοῦσιν.

589. trepidæ rerum] 'terrified about their fortunes'; trepidus expresses fright which is exhibited in restless nervous movement. The gen. is objective and very common, especially in late Latin, after adjectives expressing 'care' or 'carelessness,' e.g. anxius, certus, paridus, incautus; see Kennedy Publ. Sch. Gr. § 136. 2.; Roby S. G. 525. b.

591. ater odor: murmure caeco] A curious instance of the way in which adjectives which refer to one particular sense can be applied to another. The stench is called ater, etc., because it is 'deadly'; the murmur caecum, because it is 'undistinguishable,' i.e. confused.

593-613. Amata, seeing the attack and thinking Turnus dead, hangs herself. Lavinia and Latinus bewail her.

595. tectis] 'from the palace-roof.'

597. nusquam ...] 'that nowhere is there a Rutulian array confronting them.'

599. mentem turbata] Cf. 172 n.

600. Note the vehement alliteration in causam, clamat, crimen, caput. crimen: 'guilt' is here used rhetorically = 'the person guilty'; cf. the common Gk. use of μῖσος, στυγος = 'a person hated,' βλαβή, 'a person injurious,' etc., and Prop. 1. 11. 3, a pereant Baiae crimen amoris aquae; 4. 19. 15, crimen et illa fuit. Its position between causam and caput (= 'source') makes its meaning here absolutely clear.

602. moritura] 'resolved to die.'

603. informis] 'hideous.' According to Servius the 'pontifical books' ordained that the corpse of anyone who committed suicide by hanging should be 'flung out unburied,' and, although in Greek tragedy Iocasta (Soph. O.R. 106) and Phædra (Eur. Hipp. 802) hung themselves, the Romans seem to have regarded this method of self-destruction as especially 'hideous' and repulsive. In the century after Virgil the Stoic 'exit' (ἐξάγωγη) was usually accomplished by abstinence from food or the opening of a vein.

605. floros] So Servius for the flavos of MSS., quoting the phrase flori crines from Accius and Pacuvius, and explaining the word as = florulentus, pulchros, so that it describes the brightness, bloom, and glossiness of her hair. Virgil was fond of archaic phrases, and a rare word like floros would easily be corrupted by copyists into a simple one like flavos.

606. laniata genas] 'tearing her cheeks.' This passage shows not only the active force of the past part. pass. (see 172 n.), but also that it is used in a strictly present sense; cf. 11. 877, percussae pectora matres ... clamorem ... tollunt, 'raise a wailing as they beat their breasts.'

610. attonitus] 'dazed.'

612, 613. Repeated from 11. 471, 472 and wanting in the best MSS. qui non acceperit: the subj. because qui = quippe qui, 'seeing that he.' ultro: i.e. without waiting until cruel necessity compelled him; cf. 3 n.

614-649. Turnus hears the tumult and din within the walls, and, when his sister seeks to divert his attention by urging him to further exploits in the open field, he replies that he recognizes her in her disguise, but that, after seeing his truest comrades fall, he cannot also witness the ruin of his home. He will fly no more, but at least die undisgraced, as befits his birth.

615. palantes paucos] 'a few stragglers,' because the main portion of the army was attacking the city.

616. 'now less and less exultant in the triumph of his steeds,' which like himself were beginning to flag.

617. hunc] referring to the whole 'confused din' described in the two preceding paragraphs. caecis terroribus: 'with dark dread,' i.e. with a feeling that something dreadful, which he did not understand, had befallen.

619. inlaetabile] 'joyless,' a very strong word, which by litotes (25 n.) is = 'most melancholy'; so 3. 707, inlaetabilis ora, of the coast where Anchises dies.

621. diversa] 'distant.'

622. adductisque...] Though Turnus is not driving, cf. 624, he is easily imagined as seizing the reins and 'drawing them in.'

623. atque...] 'and straightway his sister, while... she guided, confronts him with these words.' atque marks very close connection, and, though a full stop is usually placed after habenis, the sense clearly is that, as soon as Turnus checks the steeds, his sister hastily intervenes (occurrit) to urge him to an opposite course.

625. hac] emphatic, 'here,' 'in this direction,' where we are already victorious, and not turning away to the town which has 'others to defend it.'

627. manu : 629. manu] This word is often added almost pleonastically to emphasize vigorous personal action or effort; cf. 23, 317, 605, and perpetually in the Georgics (often in the phrase ipse manu) where Virgil lays stress on the importance of personal effort, e.g. G. 1. 179, 199; 2. 126; 3. 32. Cf. Tennyson, The Passing of Arthur, "I will arise and slay thee with my hand."

629. et nos] Just as Aeneas is fighting under the walls, so 'let us too (here) hurl death upon the Trojans.'

631. Turnus ad haec] 'Thereto Turnus (answered),' the verb of 'saying' or 'replying' being, as often, omitted. Incomplete lines, like these, are fairly common in the Aeneid, which was left unfinished by Virgil at his death.

632. et dudum ...] 'both long since I recognized thee, when first with cunning thou ..., and now vainly dost thou (seek to) hide thy deity.'

634. fallis dea = λανθάνεις θεὰ οὔσα.

636. an fratris ...] 'or was it that thou mightest behold thy brother's cruel death?' The force of an is pathetic. It is often used in rhetorical argument to introduce a question an affirmative answer to which is almost impossible (e.g. 'This must be true. Or will you argue that ...?'; cf. Cic. Cat. 1. 1. 3), but here the point is that the answer which might have been supposed impossible is the true one. She must have been sent to witness her brother's death.

637. nam quid ago] 'for what am I to do?' In short questions the indicative is sometimes put for the deliberative subj. to give greater force and vividness; cf. 3. 38, quem sequimur; 367, quae prima pericula vito? 10. 675, accipio? quid ago?

638. ante ipse meos] = 'before my very eyes'; the position of ipse is due to its natural attraction to personal pronouns and their adjectives; cf. 660. voce vocantem : cf. 483 n.

640. ingentem ...] 'mighty warrior and conquered by a mighty wound'; the phrase is copied from Hom. Il. 16. 776, κείτο μέγας μεγαλῶστί.

641. occidit] thrown prominently forward for emphasis and also to balance oppetere—‘Dead, too, lest he should behold my shame, is unhappy Ufens.’ infelix: in contrast with 7. 745, Ufens, insignem fama et felicibus armis ... ne might be consecutive, ‘so that he did not see,’ but the bitterness of the language demands that it should have a final sense, as though Ufens died ‘in order that he might not see’ the disgrace of Turnus.

642. Teucro ...] In Homer the last disgrace which can befall a warrior is that his body and arms should pass into the possession of the foe. Hence the continual combats described over the body, μὴ ἀπὸ τεύχε’ ἔλονται, ἀεικίσσωσι δὲ νεκρόν (Il. 16. 545; cf. 16. 751 seq., 17. 1 seq.).

643. id ... unum] parenthetical: ‘that only was wanting to my fortunes,’ i.e. to crown my misfortunes.

644. nec dextra ...] ‘and shall I not with my sword refute the sneers of Drances?’ Notice the rhetorical antithesis between dextra and dicta. Drances had made a bitter attack on Turnus charging him with cowardice in refusing to meet Aeneas, 11. 336 seq.

645. haec] emphatic: ‘this’ = my native land.

646. Manes] the Di Manes, the powers of the world below, including the spirits of the departed, whom he was about to join.

647. ‘be ye gracious, seeing that the good-will of the gods above (lit. ‘their good-will to the gods’) is turned away from me.’ Many with good authority read adversa, and cf. such phrases as Livy 1. 46, adversa patrum voluntas; but the dat. Superis is awkward next to adversa, which does not govern it.

648. animā | atque] The lengthening of the short a, even though the ictus is on it, is unparalleled, and the hiatus makes the license more striking. The text, however, is certain, and the splendid line needs no defence. It is spoken with slow deliberation and with a dramatic pause after anima. Munro’s suggestion to read sancta ad ros anima, a! atque ... gives an intolerable line, but shows a recognition of the fact that there is a strong emotional check before atque. Some would scan istius inscia, but the lengthening of us in thesis (i.e. where the ictus is not on it) is also without parallel, and the sound of the resulting line extremely harsh.

istius culpae] 'of that' or 'such reproach.' iste, from its constant use in argument to refer to opponents or their acts and words, acquires a contemptuous or indignant sense, and is here highly emphatic = 'that reproach which is flung in my teeth.' Moreover Turnus is thinking of Drances and his detractors, and, though addressing the Manes, it is their reproaches that he is really answering; 'your taunt,' he says. 'is false.' Conington refers istius to vos, and explains 'the fault which you hate, cowardice,' but there is no word anywhere of the Manes finding any 'fault' with Turnus.

649. magnorum ... avorum] A rather favourite assonance. indignas only occurs (Sil. It. 8. 385, indignus avorum, is a copy) here with the genitive.

650-696. Saces brings news of the city's plight and the need for help from Turnus, who is at first dazed, but then, recovering himself, declares his resolve to meet Aeneas. Leaping from his chariot he bounds over the plain, irresistible as a boulder dislodged from a mountain crag, and cries aloud that he comes to decide the issue in single combat.

651. adversa ...] 'wounded right in the face with an arrow.'

652. Turnum : Turne] Notice the emphasis of personal appeal caused by the vehement repetition; cf. in te, 656; in te, 657.

653. suprema salus] 'our last hope of safety.'

654. minatur delecturum] se. se, 'threatens that he will lay low the topmost towers'; for the omission of the pronoun cf. 762, excisurum urbem minitans, and Conington quotes Livy 6. 17, refracturosque carcerem minabantur.

657. oculos referunt] 'turn their eyes.' re here does not mean 'back,' but merely indicates that the direction of the gaze is changed, and that it is fixed on a special point; so, too, 671, respexit ad urbem, 'turned his regard upon the town,' and commonly in conversation, respice ad me, ad eum, ad laevam, etc. mussat: a graphic word used (1) of men (11. 454, flent moesti mussantque patres) or even animals (cf. 718) making a low, scarcely audible, muttering or murmur when in anxiety or doubt, and then (2) = 'doubt,' 'hesitate,' as here, Latinus muttering to himself, 'in doubt what sons-in-law to invite.'

659. tui fidissima] 'most trustful in thee'; the gen. is objective, describing that on which confidence is placed. So commonly fiducia with gen. = 'trust in,' and cf. amantissima, studiosissima tui. Amata had placed all her trust in Turnus, and, when she thought him dead (cf. 598), hung herself. The rendering 'thy truest friend,' as though the words could mean 'in whom thou dost trust most,' cannot be obtained from the Latin.

663. strictisque ...] 'and the harvest of steel bristles with drawn blades.' Cf. 7. 526, atraque late | horrescit strictis seges ensibus; Hom. II. 13. 339, ἐφριξεν δὲ μάχῃ φθισίμβροτος ἔγχελισσιν. The comparison of a host with spears or swords to a field of wheat with its bristling ears is natural and obvious.

664. tu] emphatic and pointing the antithesis—'they are acting; (but) thou ...'

665. varia ...] 'bewildered by the thought (or 'picture') of such manifold misfortune,' which stirs within him a crowd of contending emotions, as described 667, 668. For imagine, cf. 560 n.

667. uno] practically = una (adverb); the various passions 'seethe all together in his heart.' pudor: 'shame,' i.e. the sense that his honour is at stake. mixtoque ...: 'and madness mingled with grief': grief stirs his passionate nature to madness.

668. amōr et] Cf. 13 n. conscia virtus: 'the consciousness of worth' or 'valour.'

669. 'when first the clouds were dispelled and light dawned again upon his mind.' His recovery from the dark storm of passion is compared to light breaking from the clouds after a tempest by a fine metaphor which is, in the main, Virgil's own, although Lucr. 3. 304 has suffundens caeca caliginis umbra (of anger), and Cat. 64. 207, caeca mentem caligine ... concitus (of grief).

672. flammis ...] 'a rolling spire of flame (lit. 'rolling with flame') was whirling heavenwards from story to story, enfolding a tower, the very tower which ...'

675. rotas pontesque] In besieging towns, wooden towers on wheels were regularly used, the various stories (tabulata) being used for carrying military engines, and also a sort of drawbridge (pontes) which could be lowered on to the walls. See Dict. of Ant. s.v. turris. In 9. 46 'towers' are, however, mentioned among the defences of the Trojan camp, and 9. 170, the defenders pontes et propugnacula innunt, while 9. 530 seq. the assault on one such tower, rasto inspectu et pontibus altis, is described at length, and it clearly stands outside the ramparts, in which case the pontes must have been intended as a means of communication with them.

676. fata superant] 'doom hath mastery.' morari: sc. me; for the inf. after absiste, cf. 586 n.

678. stat] 'it is my resolve'; cf. 2. 750, stat casus renorare noros. stat is an extremely forcible word in Latin, its shortness being its strength, and expresses immoveable fixity: cf. stat Capitolum, stat fortuna domus. quidquid...: 'to endure in death whate'er there is of bitter.' quidquid acerbi est = 'all death's bitterness'; so Cic. Rosc. 42. 122, quidquid malefici, sceleris, caedis erit; Livy 23. 9, per quidquid deorum est, 'by all the gods.' acerbus is specially used of the death of the young—the two senses of 'unripe,' 'untimely,' and 'bitter' being combined; cf. 6. 429.

681. e curru ...] Il. 3. 29, αὐτίκα δ' ἐξ ὀχέων σὺν τεύχεσιν ἄλτο χαμᾶζε, where χαμᾶζε is exactly = arvis = in arva; cf. 256 n.

684. ac velut ...] Copied from Il. 13. 136:

ἦρχε δ' ἄρ' Ἐκτωρ ἀντικρὺ μεμαῶς, ὀλοότροχος ὡς ἀπὸ πέτρης, ὄν τε κατὰ στεφάνης ποταμὸς χεიმάρροος ὤση, ρήξας ἀσπέτῳ ὄμβρῳ ἀναιδέος ἔχματα πέτρης· ὑψι δ' ἀναθρόσκων πέτεται, κτυπέει δέ θ' ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ὕλη· ὁ δ' ἀσφαλὲως θέει ἔμπεδον ...

685. turbidus imber] 'a whirling flood'; imber here clearly not 'rain,' but the 'rain-swollen stream,' Homer's ποταμὸς χειμάρροος.

686. aut annis ...] 'or age loosens, undermining it with time,' i.e. by the slow action of time.

687. fertur ...] 'sheer downward sweeps the relentless mass with mighty impulse and bounds over the earth.' For inprobis here = Homer's ἀναιδής, cf. 248 n. mons is put boldly for the dislodged crag = montis saxum, 684.

691. stridunt] 'whistle'; Virgil prefers the form stridēre to the common stridēre.

694. quaecunque ...] 'whate'er the issue it is mine.' Fortuna = fortuna pugnae; whatever the issue, victory or defeat, he claims that he should take the risk by himself. verius: 'fairer'; cf. Hor. Ep. 1. 7. 98, metiri se quemque suo modulo ac pede verum est.

695. foedus luere] 'expiate,' or 'atone for the treaty,' i.e. for its breaking, foedus being = foedus ruptum. Conington gives luere = 'pay,' and explains poenas pro rupto foedere luere, but, although in a condensed phrase, the mind may readily supply one unexpressed idea (in this case ruptum), yet it cannot supply two.

696. discessere medii] they were 'in the middle,' and 'went apart' from it; we must render, however, 'retired from the middle.'

697-745. Aeneas hastens to the combat, huge as a mountain, and all eyes are centred on the two champions. They meet with a crash, like that of two bulls contending for lordship, while in heaven Jupiter decides their doom in the scales of destiny. The sword of Turnus, which was not his own, is shivered on the divine armour of Aeneas, and he turns in flight.

The striking comparison (701-3), the simile (715-722), and the reference to the solemn arbitrament of Jupiter (725-727) all mark the supreme importance of this final struggle.

698. deserit et ... et ... deserit] repetition expressing eagerness. 'Abandons the walls' = abandons the attack on them.

699. 'and flings over all delay, breaks off every task'; the asyndeton (ἀσύνδετον, absence of connecting particle) again emphasizes his eagerness.

700. horrendumque ...] 'and thunders dreadfully on his arms'; cf. 332 n., and for horrendum, 398 n.

701. 'huge as Athos, huge as Eryx, aye or, what time he roars with his tossing oaks, huge as father Apennine himself, proudly rising heavenward with snowy crest.' The triple repetition of quantus gives emphasis, which is made still more forcible by the striking position of the word in 702. The idea is borrowed from Il. 13. 754, ἦ ῥα καὶ ὠρμήθη δρεῖ νιφθέντι εοικώς (of Hector), but elaborated in Virgil's manner ; cf. too Milton P.L. 4. 985 :

"On th' other side Satan, alarm'd, Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
Like Teneriffe or Atlas unremoved."

Athos = Ἄθως has the last syllable long ; but G. 1. 332, aut Athōn aut Rhodopen.

703. pater Appenninus] To assist his comparison, Virgil personifies the mountain, as he does Mt. Atlas, 4. 247-251 ; cf. such personal names as Jungfrau and Mönch. pater marks veneration and affection ; cf. pater Tiberinus, G. 4. 369.

706. ariete] 'battering ram.' The word forms a dactyl, i (= y) being treated as a consonant ; so, elsewhere, pāriētē, ābiētē ; cf. 747, 821.

707. armaque ...] Cf. 130. Benoist oddly explains "arma, leurs boucliers, qu'ils placent sur leurs epaules." stupet ... coisse, 'is amazed that ... (they) have met.'

709. cernere ferro] exactly = decernere ferro, 695, 'decide (the issue) with the sword,' but cernere in this sense seems archaic (found in Ennius and Luer.).

713. invadunt Martem] 'attack the fray.' clipeis atque aere sonoro : hendiadys ; the brazen shields sound as they are dashed together.

713. dat gemitum tellus] the earth seems to re-echo the clang of battle with a groan.

714. fors ..] 'chance and valour are confounded in one.' The phrase seems to mark the fury of the combatants, who, disdaining caution, dash together in a mêlée in which it looks as if chance alone could decide the issue. Any one, who has seen two boxers drop scientific sparring and really set to, will understand the idea which Virgil wishes to suggest.

715. ac velut ...] largely borrowed from G. 3. 220-223.

717. pavidī ...] 'fled are the terror-stricken herdsmen.' cessere is the perfect of rapid action.

718. mussantque ...] 'and the heifers dumbly wait to see who is to be lord of the forest.' For musso, cf. 657 n. Observe the imitative repetition of the m-sound in metu, metum, mussant.

719. quis] used loosely for uter, although there are only two combatants; cf. 727.

724. fragor] 'crash' of their meeting.

725. Iuppiter ...] So before the final meeting between Achilles and Hector, II. 22. 209:

καὶ τότε δὴ χρίσεια πατὴρ ἐτίταινε τάλαντα· ἐν δ' ἐτίθει δῦο κῆρε τανηλεγέος θανάτοιο, τὴν μὲν Ἀχιλλῆος, τὴν δ' Ἑκτορος ἵπποδάμοιο.
ἔλκε δὲ μέσσα λαβών· ῥέπε δ' Ἑκτορος αἵσιμον ἦμαρ.

aequato examine] 'in even poise'; lit. 'the tongue of the balance being made even.' examen from exigo is 'that which makes exact.'

727. quem damnet ...] the subj. is that of oblique question: 'he puts in the opposing fates of the two (to see) which of them the struggle dooms, with which weight death sinks.' The sinking scale marks death; on the other hand, in Milton, P.L. 4. 996, where

"Th' Eternal ...

Hung forth in Heav'n his golden scales, yet seen Betwixt Astraea and the Scorpion sign."

Satan's scale 'kick'd the beam,' marking that he was 'weigh'd and shown how light, how weak'; cf. Ps. lxii. 9; Daniel v. 27.

728. emicat hic ...] 'then, deeming it secure, Turnus flashes forth.' The description of Jupiter, 725-727, is introduced parenthetically, and Virgil now resumes his description of the combat. Turnus, seeing what seems a safe opportunity, strikes with lightning speed (cf. emicat).

729. consurgit in ensem] 'rises on to his sword,' i.e. so as to throw his whole weight into the stroke.

730. et ferit] Notice the effect of the rapid dactyl followed by a strong pause; cf. 951; 5. 643.

732. deserit, ni ... subeat] An irregular sentence in which something has to be supplied mentally—'the false sword fails him (and he would be helpless) did not flight come to his aid.' But, as Sidgwick remarks, the compressed irregular phrase gives a sense of vividness and rapidity.

734. ignotum] 'strange,' because the sword, as he now discovers, was not his own. The next lines give the explanation.

735. praecipitem] 'in his headlong haste.' Notice the excited alliteration of praecipitem, prima, proclia.

cum ... conscendebat] The indicative is very remarkable here in oblique narration, but gives greater precision = 'at the very moment when he was mounting,' according to the regular rule that when the point of time is strongly marked, cum with the imperfect prefers indie. to subj.

737. dum trepidat] 'while he was anxiously hurrying,' 'in his confused eagerness.' dum regularly takes the present tense even though the reference is to past time, but in the next line dum dabant is required because the idea of duration has to be expressed (cf. diu)—'long it held out, all the time that the Trojans were flying scattered.'

739. arma dei Vulcania] 'the divine arms wrought by Vulcan'; cf. 107 n. The form of the phrase is Greek; cf. Soph. O.T. 243, τὸ Πυθικὸν θεοῦ μαντεῖον; Hom. Il. 2. 54, Νέστορ' ἐν παρὰ νηὶ ... βασιλῆος. ventum est: 528 n.

740. mortalis] 'made by mortal hand'; so 797. mortali vulnere is not 'a mortal wound,' but a 'wound inflicted by a mortal.'

futilis] 'brittle,' lit. 'useless.' The adj. is first used of a vessel which will not stand, and so lets all the water run out of it (vas futile), and then of anything which is 'good-for-nothing,' 'worthless.'

743. 'and now hither then thither entwines wavering circles'; incertos emphasizes the fact that he is hemmed in and distracted, doubtful where to turn; cf. 752.

745. vasta palus] apparently the palus Laurentia (10. 709) famous for its boars.

746-790. Aeneas, though still hampered by his wound, pursues his quarry, as an Umbrian hound pursues some hemmed-in deer. Calling for his sword, Turnus flies for his life, until at last the chase brings Aeneas near the stump of a wild olive tree, sacred to Faunus, in which his spear had lodged. As he seeks to draw it out, Turnus prays to Faunus and Earth to hold it fast, so that all the efforts of Aeneas are vain, and meanwhile Juturna brings her brother his own trusty sword. Venus thereupon loosens the spear, and the champions again meet.

746. sagitta] 'the arrow-wound'; see 329 and 384 seq.

747. genua] a trochee u being made consonantal = w; cf. 905 and 706 n.

748. trepidique ...] 'and foot to foot presses on his trembling prey'; cf. 5. 324, calcemque terit iam calce Diores, of a close second in a race.

750. puniceae ...] 'hemmed in by the terror of scarlet feathers.' A cord with bright scarlet feathers was stretched along the edge of woods so as to scare game when being driven and force it to rush into the nets; cf. G. 3. 372.

751. venator canis] Cf. 11. 89, venator equus; 680, iuvenco pugnatori.

752. insidiis] referring to formidine, as ripa does to flumine. et = 'and (in the first case)' becomes practically = 'or.'

753. mille fugit refugitque vias] 'flies and flies back a thousand times over his track'; cf. 6. 122, itque reditque viam. In poetry simple verbs of motion take an acc. of that which is traversed; cf. 3. 191, currimus aequor; 5. 524, maria vecti, 'sailing over the sea'; 5. 627.

754. iam iamque ...] 'now, now he seizes him and, as if seizing him, has snapped with his jaws.' iam iamque is used when something seems to be on the very point of happening, when the very next moment must bring it about; cf. 940, and 2. 530, iam iamque manu tenet, of Pyrrhus pursuing Priam. Here the dog is so near the stag that he actually makes his bite, thinking that he has seized him. increpuit describes the rattle of the teeth as they come sharply together. Virgil is copying Apoll. Rhod. 2. 278, τυτθὸν δὲ ταινωμένοι μετόπισθεν | ἀκρῆς ἐν γενέεσσι μάτην ἀράβησαν ὄδοντας.

758. simul fugiens ... simul increpat] Cf. 10. 856, simul hoc dicens attollit, 'even as he speaks he raises,' and so in Greek constantly ἅμα λέγων, etc. The second simul is added pleonastically to emphasize the idea of eagerness and excitement. increpat: 'taunts,' 'reproaches,' i.e. for not helping him by bringing his sword.

759. nomine quemque vocans] By personal appeal he hopes to stir their sense of shame. Cf. Il. 22. 415.

761. si quisquam adeat] 'should any seek to approach (Turnus).' quisquam is generally used only in negative sentences, or sentences which are virtually negative; cf. 882, aut quicquam ... dulce ... erit? 'or will aught be sweet?' = 'nothing can be sweet'; Ecl. 9. 17, heu, cadit in quenquam tantum scelus? = 'surely no one is so wicked.' Here the order of Aeneas is in fact that not a man should stir.

762. excisurum ...] For se omitted, cf. 654 n. saucius: 'though wounded,' 'despite his wound.'

763. retexunt] 'unweave.' The point is that Turnus is perpetually doubling on his track, and so seems to 'unwind' or 'unweave' the circle which he had just made.

764. neque enim ...] 'for not trivial the prize nor sought in sport, but they strive....' The lines are borrowed from Homer's famous description of Achilles pursuing Hector, Il. 22. 159:

καρπαλίμως, ἐπεὶ οὐχ ἱερήιον οὐδὲ βοείην ἀρνίσσθην, ἃ τε ποσσὶν ἀέθλια γίγνεται ἀνδρῶν, ἀλλὰ περὶ ψυχῆς θέον Ἑκτορος ἱππόδαμοιο.

766. sacer Fauno] Trees were perpetually dedicated to some deity; e.g. 7. 59, a bay-tree to Phoebus; 10. 423, an oak to 'father Tiber'; Hor. Od. 3. 22. 5, a pine to Diana Nemorensis. Faunus is a strictly Italian deity, 'the favourable god' (fareo) who guards shepherds, or 'the favourable spirit' who, by his whisperings among the trees, gives oracles (see Mommsen, Hist. Rome, i. 176. 230); but Virgil also makes him grandson of Saturnus and father of Latinus (7. 48), so that he was not only 'a Laurentine deity' (Laurenti divo), but also an actual king of Laurentum.

768. dona] = votas vestes, 770. The sailors would make a vow to their native deity that if they escaped shipwreck they would dedicate their raiment to him by hanging it on his sacred tree. Cf. Hor. Od. 5. 15, urida | suspendisse potenti vestimenta maris deo.

770. nullo discrimine] 'making no distinction,' 'with no regard (to its sanctity).' sacrum: masc., see 208 n.

771. puro] Homer's ἐν καθάρῳ.

772. stabāt; huc] Cf. 13 n.

773. detulerat, fixam et ...] 'had carried it, and held it fixed in the tough root.' The force of the throw is said not unnaturally to 'hold the spear fixed' because it was the cause of its being so held. Conington prefers to take fixam with detulerat, 'had carried it so that it was fixed there.' The spear is the one thrown, 711.

777. optima Terra] 'most kindly Earth'; he appeals to his mother Earth to aid her son. optima: as often in pater optime, mater optima, but bonus and optimus are also frequently applied to deities. colui vestros si ...: 'if I have ever held your service hallowed even as the followers of Aeneas ... have profaned it'; i.e. in the case of Faunus by destroying his sacred tree, in that of Terra by devastating the land.

780. non cassa ...] 'to no fruitless prayer'; the aid which he asked should be sent in answer to his prayer (in vota) was immediately granted, so that his prayer did not prove 'empty' or 'void of result.'

782. morsus] 'grip,' in which the wood holds the spear.

785. dea Daunia] i.e. Juturna, the 'divine daughter of Daunus (22),' just as her brother Turnus is 'his hero son' (Daunius heros, 723).

786. Nymphae] Cf. 142. Venus, as a goddess, 'thought scorn that such power be granted to a presumptuous Nymph,' Nymphs being only half-divine.

787. alta ab radice] 'from the deep root,' i.e. the root in which it was deeply planted.

788. sublimes] a graphic word vividly depicting the two champions as they stand facing one another 'at their full height.' Of course the word not only describes their lofty mien, but suggests their high spirit; to render it 'high-spirited,' however, is to unduly narrow its force.

790. adsistunt ...] 'stand to face the contest of Mars breathless.' Many, however, render 'of breathless Mars' (le combat qui essouffle, Benoist), making anheli gen. sing. on the ground that the combatants were now animis refecti. But, surely, however 'refreshed in spirit,' both warriors must have been a little out of breath still, and the description of them as facing each other 'panting' is highly natural, whereas Mars anhelus is a most startling phrase. Conington with weak authority reads certamine.

791-842. Meantime Jupiter begs Juno to cease at last from opposing the fortunes of the Trojans. She replies that she yields to his will and destiny, only begging that when the two hostile nations are united in one the name of Latium and Rome may be preserved and the hated name of Troy be forgotten. Jupiter assures her that the Trojans will disappear in that new race which, with Italian speech and customs, is to exceed all nations in righteousness and also in its reverence for herself.

792. de nube] Apparently Juno has taken up her position in a cloud so as to watch the combat unseen and be ready to interfere. In 796 Jupiter asks her 'with what hope she still lingers amid the chilly clouds,' and 842, when she complies with his request to give up all thought of intervention, she 'quits the sky and abandons the cloud.' Virgil therefore seems to regard the clouds here as intermediate between earth and the dwelling of the gods, so that they can resort to them whenever they wish to watch human affairs more closely. fulva: 'golden'; cf. 7. 279, fulrum aurum.

793. fnis] i.e. of your persecution of Aeneas; see Intr. p. xv.

794. indigetem] The word describes one who, after doing great services to his country, is deified as one of its special heroes and protectors. Cf. G. 1. 498, di patrii, indigetes, et Romule Vestaque Mater, 'ye gods and heroes of our country, even thou, O Romulus, and thou, O Vesta,' where Vesta is appealed to as holding a high place among the di patrii and Romulus among the indigetes, the two classes corresponding to the Greek θεοὶ καὶ ἡρώες οἱ ἐγγράριοι. Livy 1. 2. 6 refers to a so-called tomb of Aeneas where he was honoured under the title of Iovem indigetem.

795. deberi caelo] i.e. that heaven and immortality claim him, so that to devise his destruction (cf. quid struis) is absurd. The opposite phrase is found in Hor. A. P. 63, debemur morti nos nostraque.

795. fatisque] 'by destiny,' which throughout the Aeneid is the ruling power. On the whole it is identical with the 'will' (cf. 808) of Jupiter, the supreme deity, but even he seems bound to act according to its laws, so that Juno only asks him to grant something 'which is not fixed by any law of destiny' (819). The gods have all, according to their degrees, a certain power of ruling events, and the 'will' of Jupiter in turn governs the gods, but 'destiny' or 'fate' seems a still higher power, the decisions of which he cannot control, but only declare or determine (c.g. 726, by 'weighing destinies').

796. gelidis] 'chilly'; a very odd epithet, which seems to suggest that Juno would be more comfortable by the domestic hearth.

797. mortalin] For scansion cf. 503n.; and for meaning 740n.

798. quid enim ...] The clause explains why he reproaches Juno with restoring the sword; he does so because without Juno's support Iturna could have done nothing.

801. nec te ...] 'that such grievous pain may not consume thee in silence and (that) bitter troubles (may not) so often come to me from thy sweet lips.' For Juno's pain, see l. 11, 12; 25, where its cause is given as iudicium Paridis spretaeque iniuria formae. Notice that the negative force of ne extends to the second clause, also the humour with which Virgil makes Jupiter appeal to feminine love of a compliment. dulci tristes: antithetic juxtaposition.

803. ad supremum] 'to the final issue'; cf. 424n.

805. 'to disfigure a home and confound the bridal-song with lamentation.' deformare describes the change in the outward appearance of the house caused by the death of Amata, the trappings of woe being substituted for the gay decorations which the marriage of Turnus would have required.

808. ista quidem] The emphasis on the pronoun is clear, and suggests that in spite of Juno's 'downcast visage' she speaks with a little personal feeling. In translating we must alter the form of the sentence—'That indeed, I know well, is thy good pleasure, and therefore have I, unwillingly, abandoned both ...'

811. digna indigna pati] A very compressed phrase, which means 'to endure all things without regard to the question whether they were fit or unfit to be endured,' 'to endure all things, meet or unmeet.' In English some connecting particle is inserted between the two contrasted adjectives (e.g. 'wrong or right,' 'fat and lean,' 'good and bad'), but Latin, according to its regular idiom, usually puts them simply side by side, e.g. bona mala, honesta turpia, facienda dicenda, though it sometimes inserts 'and,' cf. 9. 595, digna atque indigna relatu vociferans, as in Greek, ῥητὰ καὶ ἄρρητα ὀνομάζων, ῥητὸν ἄρρητόν τ' ἔπος. flammis cincta: 'engirdled with fire,' i.e. decked in all the terrors of wrathful deity, of which fire is the visible symbol, see the O.T. passim. sub here merely describes close proximity; 'close on the very line of battle.'

814. et pro vita..] 'and for his life I assented that she should dare too bold a deed, yet not (so far as) that she should aim a dart ...' Juno quite assents to Jupiter's general proposition (cf. 797) that it was unfitting for a mortal to wound a god or future god like Aeneas, but urges that Juturna had gone a little beyond her orders. To us the whole discussion appears rather comic, and indeed it is only in very early and simple composition that it is possible to introduce divine beings arguing, debating, and acting like mere mortals without verging on the ridiculous.

816. Stygii] 'the unpardoning head of the Stygian stream.' To swear by the Styx was the most sacred oath of the gods; cf. Hom. II. 8. 369:

καὶ τὸ κατειβόμενον Στυγὸς ὕδωρ, ὃς τε μέγιστος ἔρκος δεινότατός τε πέλει μακάρεσσι θεοῖσι.

caput is used with a double meaning (1) = 'fountain-head,' (2) = 'head,' the Styx being personified, and it being regular to 'swear by the head,' 'invoke curses on the head,' etc.

817. superstitio] here = object of reverential awe.

819. illud] The pronoun, as usually in Latin, points forward to the request contained in 821 seq.—'This I entreat thee ... not to command (ne ... iubeas).'

820. pro maiestate tuorum] 'for (the sake of) the greatness of thy kin.' Saturn had reigned in Latium, and was the legendary grandsire of Faunus the father of Latinus; cf. 7.

821. conubiis] The u in nūbo is long, but in pronūba, innūbus, short. Virgil always has conūbia (cf. 42), and hence many would scan conubiis as trisyllabic, the first i being made consonantal (cf. 706 n.), but while in conubia the u is regularly in arsis, in conubiis it is regularly in thesis, and Virgil may therefore regard its quantity as doubtful and dependent upon its position in the verse. See Munro, Lucr. 3. 776.

822. esto] 'bitterly consenting to felicibus,' Conington.

826. sit Latium ...] 'let the land be Latium, let the kings be Alban ...' The emphasis is wholly on the proper names; so too in the next line on Romana and Itala. According to Virgil (l. 266 seq.) Ascanius founded Alba Longa and reigned there for 30 years, and his successors for 300 more, until Romulus founded Rome.

828. occidit, occideritque sinas] 'fallen is Troy, and fallen let it be together with its name.' Although Virgil connects Rome with Troy, it is clear that the connection is felt to be wholly literary and romantic, while the strong national sentiment is entirely opposed to the idea of a foreign and especially an Asiatic origin. Cf. the remarkably similar language of Juno, Hor. Od. 3. 3. 18 seq.

829. repertor] 'designer,' or, perhaps, more generally 'author.' For this smile of Jove, cf. l. 254, olli subridens hominum sator atque deorum | vultu, quo caelum tempestatesque serenat, where it is bestowed on Venus.

830. et germana ...] Jupiter here humorously recognizes in the 'waves of passion' which surge in Juno's bosom the proof of her kinship to himself. In Homer and elsewhere he complains of her temper, e.g. Il. 5. 892, μένος ἐστὶν ἀνδράσχετον οὐκ ἐπιεικτόν | Ἥρης.

832. et inceptum] 'control the causeless outbreak of thy wrath.'

833. An admirable line. do, quod vis, by its extreme simplicity and terseness, marks the supreme authority of the speaker (cf. the phrase in which the royal assent used to be given to acts of Parliament, le Roi le veut), while the next words are uttered in a tone of extreme courtesy—'with cheerful submission I bow to thy will.' me remitto = 'I unbend'; I do not strain my authority.

835. commixti ...] 'The Trojans shall but sink blended in the mass'; they shall be incorporated and absorbed in the native Italian race, but nothing more. This peculiar phrase should be carefully compared with G. 1. 327, magnus alit magno commixtus corpore fetus, where Virgil is describing the heaven (i.e. the rain) descending into the lap of earth, and there disappearing 'commingled with its (the earth's) mighty frame,' while at the same time securing all fertility and increase. So too the Trojans will disappear and be absorbed in the great Latin community which they join, and from this happy union shall 'arise a mixed race of Italian breed which shall surpass men and surpass the gods in righteousness.'

Conington gives for subsident, 'shall hold the lowest place,' and explains corpore tantum of the Trojans being 'mingled with the Latins in body only, not in name,' which I do not understand.

836. morem ... adiciam] Cf. 192. What Aeneas there proposes to do Jupiter here declares to be his own purpose.

839. pietate] This is in Virgil the special Roman virtue. The ideal Roman is vir pietate gravis (l. 151), and it is as the type of his race, not merely as the saviour of Anchises, that Aeneas is everywhere pious. This word expresses dutiful regard for natural obligation either to the gods, kinsfolk, or country. But as a man should show his regard to the gods, so they are bound to show reciprocal regard for him, and the pietas of the gods is often referred to, e.g. 5. 688, si quid pietas antiqua labores | respicit humanos. But the gods may fail in this 'righteous regard,' and hence to speak of the Romans 'exceeding the gods' in it is a phrase not beyond the limits of rhetorical amplification.

840. nec gens ..] She shared with Jupiter and Minerva the great temple on the Capitol; as Juno Regina she had her own temple on the Aventine, and others as Juno Moneta, Juno Lucina, etc.

842. interea] 'and so,' i.e. while in this softened mood. For excedit caelo, cf. 791 n.

843-886. Jupiter, desiring to remove Juturna from her brother's side, summons one of the two Furies who wait beside his portals to execute his judgments upon men. The Fury speeds earthwards, and, taking the shape of an ill-omened bird, flies screaming before the terror-stricken Turnus. Iuturna recognizes the fatal sign and, praying for that death which she can never obtain, returns to her home in the stream.

845. Usually the three Furies, Tisiphone, Alecto, and Megaera, have their dwelling in Tartarus (6. 280, 571), but Virgil here clearly distinguishes between the 'twin plagues whose name is Dreadful,' who attend at the portals of Jove, and their sister, who he describes as Tartaream, i.e. inhabiting Tartarus. dicuntur, 'are told of,' seems to mark the account given of them as somewhat novel. cognomine: the cognomen is a name which 'corresponds' or 'answers to' something. In Roman names it follows the praenomen and nomen, originally marking some personal quality or distinction, e.g. T. Manlius Torquatus, M. Crassus Dives; and hence is frequently used, as here, of 'a name which fits,' these plagues being fitly called 'the Dread beings' (Σεμναι).

846. Nox intempesta] A phrase also found G. 1. 247, and in Luer. and Cicero, and generally rendered 'unseasonable night,' 'night when no man can work.' Cf. Varro 7. 72, nox intempesta, quo tempore nihil agitur; Macrobian. Sat. 1. 3.

847. uno eodemque] eodem is made a dissyllable (by synizesis) and then elided.

848. serpentum spiris] the 'snaky coils' of their hair. ventosas, 'windy'; a suggestive epithet which is best left unexplained. Conington well quotes Zechariah v. 9, "and behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings."

850. adparent] 'attend'; the word suggests the apparitores or 'public officers' of magistrates.

851. deum rex] The monosyllabic ending is intended to suggest awe; so too the novel ending of 863.

854. inque omen] 'as a warning'; lit. 'so as to be an omen.'

856. per nubem] 'through a cloud.' Virgil wishes to emphasize the idea of the arrow coming from no visible source ('dropping,' as we might say, 'from the clouds'), cf. 859, 'whirring and undetected it cleaves the swift shade.' He does so in order to suggest how the Fury appears as if from nowhere.

857. Parthus ... Parthus, sive Cydon] Virgil is fond of this repetition of a word when he wishes to amplify an idea; cf. 674, turrinque tenebat, | turrim quae (then follows a fuller description); 897, saxum circumspicit ingens, | saxum antiquum ... The men of Cydon in Crete were noted archers, cf. Ecl. 10. 59.

859. celeres ... transilit umbras] so 4. 226, 270, 357, celeres per auras is used of Mercury flying swiftly through the air. The air is imagined as swiftly passing by the object which swiftly passes through it; so we speak of objects 'flying past' when we travel in an express. The repetition of celerem (853), celeri (855), and celeres, here seems to show want of revision; cf. 631 n.

861. videt] i.e. comes in sight of.

862. alitis parvae] i.e. of an owl; cf. 4. 462; G. 1. 402. parvae: 'small'; i.e. in comparison with the Fury's natural size. collecta: 'gathering herself together,' 'shrinking.'

863. quondam] 'at times,' 'oft.' Notice the alliteration in quae quondam, sedens serum, which, together with the spondaic ending culminibus desertis, is intended to suggest awe and melancholy.

864. serum canit] 'sings late,' = serum carmen canit, cf. 398 n. inportuna: cf. G. 1. 470, inportunaeque volucres, used of birds of ill omen. The adj. is a very strong one, used strictly, like inportuosus, of a coast which has no harbours, and then = 'unseasonable,' 'utterly out of place,' 'intolerable.'

869. stridorem ... et alas] = stridorem alarum; she 'recognizes the whir of the Fury's wings,' cf. 876. For other instances of hendiadys (ἐν διὰ δυοῖν), the figure by which two words or phrases are simply put side by side, instead of a single complex phrase in which the words qualify each other; cf. 50. 508.

871. soror] added pleonastically to emphasize the cause of her conduct—'with a sister's sorrow.'

873. iam] emphatic; 'now' = 'after this.' durae: 'enduring'; she has borne everything for his sake, but now she must yield to crushing destiny. For durus so used, cf. 3. 94, Dardanidae duri; 5. 730, gens dura atque aspera cultu. Conington strangely explains 'obdurate,' 'hard-hearted,' as though she reproached herself with neglecting Turnus. It is not her will but her power which is weak.

875. ne me ...] 'affright not my frightened soul.' She tells them bitterly that their efforts to scare her are superfluous, for she is already cowed and conquered.

876. obscae volucres] the plural by a natural inaccuracy, or perhaps to suggest Juturna's confusion.

878. magnanimi Iovis] Cf. 144 n. haec ...: 'this is his return for my (lost) maidenhood.'

880. condicio] 'law.' Death is the ordinary law of life, but Juturna has been robbed of the benefit of it. possem ...: 'else were I able now at least to end ...'; the protasis ni mortis condicio adempta esset has to be mentally supplied.

882. aut quicquam ...] 'or can aught of mine be dear to me ...?' meorum = 'of my life,' 'of whatever can befall me.' For quicquam, see 761 n.

883. o quae ...] 'O what lowest depth earth could gape (deep) enough for me?' The phrase is highly rhetorical: the lowest depth is not deep enough for her. Notice too the vehement repetition of ima and imos. Conington punctuates the sentence with a mark of exclamation, but it is distinctly a question, though of course such questions (like πῶς ἄν; τίς ἄν; in Greek) imply a wish—'Would that earth might gape!'

885. glaucos] 'bluish-grey'; the colour of water; cf. Lucr. 1. 719, glaucis ... ab undis. So 8. 33, Tiberinus wears glaucus amictus; G. 4. 335, the river-nymphs weave wool 'dyed with the hue of glass' (hyali ... colore). Juturna veils her head as a mark of despair (cf. Livy 4. 12, multi ... spe amissa ... capitibus obvolutis in Tiberim se praecipitaverunt), the idea being that signs of extreme agony should be hidden from sight; see Cic. Orator, 22. 74, where a painter, depicting the sacrifice of Iphigeneia, covers the head of Agamemnon. So too Julius Caesar drew his robe over his face as he fell.

887-952. Aeneas taunts his opponent with still shrinking from the combat, and Turnus seizes a huge boulder, but the hand of doom was upon him, and, when he seeks to fling it, his power fails and he is like one who seeks to accomplish something in a dream. Aeneas hurls his spear like a thunderbolt, deeply wounding Turnus, who prays for pity so that Aeneas almost yields, when the sight of the belt of Pallas, which Turnus was wearing, inflames his fury and he strikes the avenging blow.

888. ingens, arboreum] 'huge, vast as a tree'; cf. Hom. Il. 5. 745, ἔγχος | βριθὺ, μέγα, στιβαρόν, and Milton, P.L. 1. 202:

"His spear, to equal which the tallest pine Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great ammiral, were but a wand."

889. nunc deinde] 'now, after that,' i.e. after recovering thy sword.

891. et contrahe ...] 'and gather together all thy power of courage or of skill.' After each of the imperative clauses, verte ..., contrahe ..., opta ..., we must supply the thought 'and it will be in vain.'

894. caput quassans] marking melancholy; cf. Luer. 2. 1164, iamque caput quassans grandis suspirat arator | crebrius. The few words of Turnus are in Virgil's noblest manner, and Hector's speech (Il. 22. 297), beginning ὦ πόποι, ἦ μάλα δὴ με θεοὶ θάνατόνδε κάλεσσαν, though it may have suggested them, cannot be compared with them in their strong simplicity.

898. limes ...] So Hom. Il. 21. 403 of Athena, ἡ δ' ἀναχασσαμένη λίθον εἶλετο χειρὶ παχείῃ ... τὸν ῥ' ἄνδρες πρότεροι θέσαν ἔμμεναι οὖρον ἀρούρης. 'Boundary-stones,' sacred to the god Terminus, were regularly set up to mark the limit of ownership and 'determine strife.' litem discerneret: lit. 'decide a contentious point.'

899. vix illud ...] So Il. 12. 447, Hector picks up a stone:

*τὸν δ' οὐ κε δὺ' ἄνερε δῆμον ἀρίστω
ρήϊδίῳς ἐπ' ἄμαξαν ἀπ' οὐδεὸς ὀχλίσσειαν οἶοι νῦν βροτοὶ εἶσ'· ὁ δέ μιν ῥέα πάλλε καὶ οἶος.*

The exaggeration from 'two' to 'twelve' men marks the literary imitator who disregards facts. For a more pardonable exaggeration of Homer, cf. 6. 578.

902. altior insurgens] 'rising higher on to it'; the force of in- is that he raises himself so as to throw his weight into the stone; cf. intorquet, 921. cursu concitus: so as to get impulse.

903. se cognoscit] 'recognizes himself.' In no movement can he feel any trace of his usual vigour.

905. genua] scanned as a trochee, u being made consonantal = w; cf. 701 n.

906. lapis ipse] The 'stone itself' shares the weakness of Turnus. vacuum per inane: 'through empty space'; cf. 354 n.

908. pressit] 'weighed down.' The comparison is from Il. 22. 199:

ὥς δ' ἐν ὀνείρῳ οὐ δύναται φεύγοντα διώκειν, οὔτ' ἄρ' ὁ τὸν δύναται ὑποφείγειν, οὔθ' ὁ διώκειν, ὥς ὁ τὸν οὐ δύνατο μάρψαι ποσίν, οὐδ' ὃς ἀλύξαι.

912. sequuntur] 'attend,' 'come at our bidding.'

913. viam] 'an opening' to attack.

914. tum pectore ...: 'then shifting fancies whirl through his brain.'

916. telumque ...] 'and he trembles at the threatening spear.' telum instare really forms an acc. after tremescit, or we may say that tremescit is used in a pregnant sense = 'he sees trembling that ...'

920. sortitus ...] 'seeking with his eyes to win the happy spot.' As often with deponent past participles, sortitus is strictly present in sense, and sortiri is = 'seek to gain by chance,' fortuna being the 'lucky spot' between the joints of the armour where the spear can enter. Virgil's elaborate phrase = Il. 22. 321, εἰσορόων χροά καλὸν, ὅπη εἴξειε μάλιστα.

921. murali tormento] See Dict. Ant. s.v. Tormentum. Such engines used for attacking fortifications were the balista which hurled stones, and the catapulta which discharged darts. The impulse was secured by 'winding back' (torqueo) a huge spring which was then let loose.

923. instar] This word, probably connected with σταυρός, etc. = 'something set up,' 'an image,' is regularly used with a gen. almost adverbially = 'like' (cf. 2. 15, instar montis equum; 7. 707, ipse agminis instar), though strictly it is a noun in apposition. So here the 'spear brings destruction like (lit. 'the image of') a black whirlwind.'

924. oras] 'edge.' The spear passes through the 'outmost circle of his sevenfold shield,' and through the bottom of his corslet, wounding him in the thigh. septemplex = ἑπταβέλιος.

926. incidit ictus | ingens] emphatic alliteration. Notice too the moaning u-sounds in 928.

930. precantem] 'prayerful.'

931. merui] sc. mortem.

932. sorte] the 'chance' or 'fortune of war' which has fallen to you (tua), and which you have the right to use to the full by slaying me.

933. fuit et tibi talis ...] 'and thou too didst once have a father, Anchises, in like case,' i.e. old and anxious for his son. So Il. 22. 420, Priam thinks that Achilles may pity his age when he thinks of his own father—καὶ δὲ νῦ τῷ γε πατὴρ τοιόσδε τέτυκται, | Πηλεΐς.

935. 'and give back me, or, if thou wilt, my lifeless body to my kin.' Turnus pleads for his life, or at least that he may be buried by his kinsfolk, and not be flung to the dogs (cf. Il. 22. 339, μή με ἔα παρὰ νηυσὶ κύνας καταδάψαι Ἀχαιῶν ... σῶμα δὲ οἰκάδ' ἐμὸν δόμεναι πάλιν). Sidgwick says, 'for his own life he does not care,' and Conington speaks of 'his indifference to death,' but the whole passage shows that his prayer is really for his life, and that Virgil represents Aeneas as on the point of granting it (940).

936. victum] sc. me. He is not only defeated, but has acknowledged his defeat before all the host.

941. infelix ...] The 'ill-starred baldric,' which catches the eye of Aeneas, is the one which Turnus had taken from Pallas after slaying him; cf. 10. 495, where it is described as of 'vast weight,' with the story of the Danaids chased on its heavy gold plates. The second clause et ... bullis merely amplifies the first; 'when the ill-starred baldric met his view, and the sword-belt flashed with its well-known studs.'

943. pueri] 'young'; added to increase the pathos.

944. inimicum insigne] probably merely the badge or trophy 'won from his foe,' though inimicum may possibly also suggest that the trophy was fatal to its wearer.

945. oculis ... hausit] 'when he devoured (lit. 'drank in') with his eyes the trophy that recalled cruel grief.' exuviasque is added to explain monimenta. For hausit, cf. 4. 661, hauriat hunc oculis ignem; 4. 359, vocemque his auribus hausi.

947. 'Art thou, thou bedecked in the spoils of those I loved, to be snatched hence from me?' indute is more vigorous than the nom. would be; cf. 2. 283, quibus, Hector, aboris | expectate renis? Conington explains hinc 'after this, i.e. after daring to wear this trophy, but quotes no parallel for such a use.

949. inmolat] 'sacrifices,' i.e. as a victim whose blood he has a right to demand.

951. fervidus] For the rhythm, cf. 730 and note. solvuntur membra: the Homeric λύντο δε γυῖα, γυῖα λέλυντο. frigore: i.e. the cold of death.

952. vitaque ...] So Homer of the death of Hector (Il. 22. 362):

ψυχὴ δ' ἐκ ῥεθέων παμένη Αἰδόςδε βεβήκει, δν πότμον γούωσα, λιποῦσ' ἀδρότητα καὶ ἥβην, which shows the force of indignata: the soul 'chafes indignantly' at the thought of dying in early manhood. Virgil has the same line (Il. 831) of the death of Camilla.
